Runaway cement truck nearly hits house

By MARY SCHLEY

A MAN who lives near the intersection of Highway 1 and Carpenter Street was convinced death was imminent for him and his family when a runaway cement truck, which may have weighed more than 50,000 pounds, hit his wife’s parked Mercedes and plowed down the driveway toward their home on Handley Drive last Wednesday afternoon.

Amir Tadros described the incident as “horrible and traumatic” a couple of days later. “There’s nothing more horrible than death coming to our front door,” he said. The crash occurred just before 2 p.m. Sept. 21, when a runaway Las Animas Concrete Peterbilt cement truck smashed into the 2019 Mercedes parked at the top of Tadros’ sloping driveway and overturned, according to Cal- ifornia Highway Patrol public information officer Jessica Madueto.

The wreck also damaged a fence and trees, and Madueto said the cement truck, driven by an unnamed 51-year-old man from Watsonville, went out of control “due to unknown mechanical reasons.” The driver sustained minor injuries and was taken to the hospital. It is unknown how much concrete the truck was carrying.

“Really loud bang” Tadros said that at that time, he was at home talking on the phone while his wife and daughter were in other parts of the house. “I was walking onto my deck to continue my conversation with my friend, and I heard a really loud bang and looked back, because I thought it came from the highway,” he said, since Highway 1 passes nearby. “I look toward the driveway, and there’s a large cement truck pushing my wife’s vehicle toward the driveway, and there’s a large cement truck pushing my wife’s vehicle...

Lawsuit targets skincare shop over $28K sale tactics

■ Woman alleges ‘physical intimidation’

By MARY SCHLEY

DOZENS OF complaints about high pressure sales tactics and deceptive pitches at three similar skincare stores on Ocean Avenue have poured into city hall, the police department and the chamber of commerce practically since the first shop opened seven years ago, and some have made it to small claims court. This week, a woman sued one of them in Monterey County Superior Court for allegedly bilking her out of more than $28,000 through fraud and coercion.

According to the lawsuit filed Monday by Monterey attorney Robert Ponce, Gayle Roderick was walking past Carmel Beauty Boutique (now called Carmel Bou- tique and operating under a different owner, though in a similar manner) on Sept. 27, 2020, when a saleswoman approached, got her into conversation and led her inside. There, the employee spilled cream to Roderick’s left eye.

‘Skin expert’ Roderick subsequently agreed to purchase the cream, but as she started to leave, the saleswoman put the item high on a shelf, out of reach, and insisted Roderick speak with a “skin expert” named Paul. Roderick, assuming she had to get her car out of a 20-minute space, but the...

RUSTY is sitting near the desk, wanting attention but unwilling to ask for it. Cats are like that. Throughout 69 years of marriage, they’d always had a dog. Yet, in their last few years together, after losing a beloved black Lab, she came home from Pet Food Express with a cat.

“I don’t know how to describe him,” said his person, now 90. “He’s 10 years old. His coat is yellow and quite even, and he has white on his toes. His name is Rusty. I don’t remember if we named him that, or if he came with that name.”

After Rusty was born, he was sold to a couple who had a ranch, his person recalled. His assumption is that Rusty was not comfortable there, so after about six months, they brought him to the pet store at The Crossroads shopping center. Smitten, his person’s wife adopted him and brought him home to Hacienda Carmel.

“At first, I had no idea we were getting a cat,” his person said. “But after my wife passed away, about three years ago, he became my constant companion.”

Rusty has his habits. He likes to go outside in the morning until about noon, a practice which has enabled him to become quite acquainted with the Hacienda Carmel community — every cat and dog, where the birds and squirrels congregate, and just about every human resident on the property.

“Rusty used to walk with me about a quarter mile around Hacienda,” his person said. “He gets along with everyone, and everyone knows his name. But they don’t always remember mine. About a month ago, he started walking about halfway before quitting. I guess he’s getting old.”

P.B. Co. claims water district chief misled state regulator

By KELLY NIX

THE PEBBLE Beach Company has accused the head of the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District of providing “false and biased” data to a state agency in an effort to boost its own recycled water project over a competing project proposed by Cal Am.

But water district general manager Dave Stoldt maintained this week that the numbers he cited are accurate and were calculated by a reputable third party.

A Sept. 19 letter from P.B. Co. attorney Diane Goldman to the California Public Utilities Commission accused Stoldt of misleading the agency during August testimony addressing water supply and demand for the Monterey Peninsula.

Specifically, the attorney said, Stoldt “to support the water district’s contention that the Peninsula doesn’t need as much water as Cal Am projects — told the CPUC that the Pebble Beach Company ‘has not yet fully utilized’ most of its 350 acre-feet of water entitlements, ‘and therefore the water demand projections of the Monterey Peninsula should be reduced accordingly.’”

However, the Pebble Beach Company said it has already used or allocated for use all but 60 acre-feet of its allocation, and called the water district’s testimony “false and biased.”

“Unfortunately, the water management district has an inherent conflict of interest,” Goldman continued. “Its board members publicly oppose the Cal Am desalination project and have been avowedly pursuing a public buyout of Cal Am,” the company said.

Enough water

Stoldt’s comments were made at a hearing for the CPUC to weigh supply and demand estimates for the Monterey Peninsula Water Supply Project, including a desalination plant proposed by Cal Am which the water district opposes.

The water district believes its wastewater reclamation project, Pure Water Monterey, which is already supplying some recycled water, would produce enough for the Peninsula for 30 years — and at a lower price if it could be expanded.

“Not fantasy”

The P.B. Company goes on to say that the water district “makes its case against” Cal Am’s desal project by “falsely asserting that Pebble Beach Company’s water entitlement is available to meet the community’s water needs.”

“We urge the CPUC to refrain from relying on such false and misleading testimony in your analysis and deliberations,” the company said.

The CPUC is gathering testimony about water supply and demand for the Monterey Peninsula because Cal Am wants to amend an agreement with the water district and sewer agency Monterey One Water — partners in the Pure Water Monterey project — so it can purchase water from the recycling plant and deliver it to customers.

Stoldt pushed back on the P.B. Co.’s claims, telling The Pine Cone Wednesday that “there is nothing false or biased in any of our claims. We deal in facts, not fantasies.”

He said that the water district’s demand forecast is “derived from an unbiased third-party growth forecast” developed by the Association of Monterey Bay Area Governments.

“All of Pebble Beach’s needs are in that growth forecast,” Stoldt said.

Also in its letter to the CPUC, the Pebble Beach Company pointed to its own Water district

‘Strategy paper’ to be subject of Design Traditions 1.5 workshop

By MARY SCHLEY

TELLING PEOPLE how to design their houses and commercial buildings is complicated, and while the city already provides plenty of direction on everything from roofing materials and light fixtures, to paint colors and window styles, those extensive guidelines need to be updated — and in some cases, expanded. How to do that, exactly, is the subject of a “strategy paper” released by planning director Brandon Swanson this week and will be discussed at an Oct. 3 public workshop.

“The paper lays out a road map for making updates to the design guidelines based on community feedback,” he said. “It compiles input from the June workshops, the online survey, steering committee meetings and other public comments.”

And the main goal of Monday’s workshop will be to “find out from you if we accurately captured the community’s feedback before we finalize the strategy paper and start drafting the design guideline updates.”

Forested village

The paper begins with a list of some of the city’s “defining characteristics” and labels Carmel as “a village in the forest.” While updating the design guidelines, it says, several “guiding principles” should be considered, including maintaining and enhancing the forest, encouraging “modest” and “human-scaled” building designs, respecting history, fitting in with the context — which has to be defined — of a neighborhood or area, paying attention to detail and using quality building materials and construction, and encouraging “compatible diversity” in design.

Of course, whether a building would fit in or not is subjective, as is the acceptable range of diversity in design, so the updates will attempt to hammer those issues out.

Beyond Ocean

They’ll also flesh out design standards for the commercial district that so far have focused on Ocean Avenue and have only outlined high-level design principles for commercial buildings while being mum on design guidelines for hotels and apartment buildings that are also allowed in the business districts.

The strategy paper explores administrative processes and ways to make them better, including reestablishing the design review board, and touches on amendments that will have to be made to the zoning code as part of the project.

The workshop will be held in Carpenter Hall in Sunset Center at Mission and Ninth from 5 to 8 p.m., as well as via Zoom. Masks are required for those attending in person.

To read the paper, go to drive.google.com/file/d/1yh1_90hOFohqmmzIYQ7TTX1AXx2Dpamx/view.

Monterey homeless shelter could open next year, fundraiser set for Sunday

By CHRIS COUNTS

MODELED AFTER a similar facility in Seaside that opened last year, the future Shuman Heart House at 600 E. Franklin St. in Monterey will offer temporary housing and other services to homeless women and families. So far, $6 million has been raised for the project, while another $1.8 million is needed.

To help bridge the funding gap, a cast of local musicians will present a fundraising concert Sunday at the Monterey County Fairgrounds.

The lineup includes Def Leppard drummer Rick Allen, his wife, singer and multi-instrumentalist Laura Monroe, singer Tammi Brown, pianist John Wineglass, singer and guitarist Katherine Lavin, singer and pianist Summer Shuman, percussionist Jayson Fann and drummer Steve Robertson.

Monroe said she’s honored to contribute toward a worthy cause.

“We are so happy to support the Shuman Heart House to help women and children in need of housing in Monterey County,” she said. “We’ve seen the increase in homelessness and suffering that has happened since the pandemic, and it will take us all coming together to help bring safety and shelter to the people in our community who so desperately need it.”

Donor steps up

Built in 1930, the 6,300-square-foot building was once home to the Union Ice Factory. Most recently, it housed the Arthur Murray Dance Studio. The property measures 23,000 square feet, leaving space for improvements, which could include a playground.

The site was purchased for $3 million in June 2021 and given to Monterey-based charity Community Human Services. The funds came from donor Mark Shuman, whose daughter is one of the musicians playing Sunday. Shuman gave the money with the hope that “it would be the catalyst to spur community action to address the homelessness crisis.”

Construction is expected to take six to eight months, and if all goes according to plan, Shuman Heart House will open sometime next summer.

Success in Seaside

The Shuman Heart House — which will offer up to 35 beds — is modeled after Casa de Noche Buena in Seaside, which opened in January 2021 and is owned and operated by Community Human Services. Shuman played a key role in funding the development of that facility, too.

Jodi Litz, development director for Community Human Services, told The Pine Cone that Casa de Noche Buena has helped many people transition out of homelessness.

“It’s been very successful,” Litz said. “Most people who leave shelter go on to transitional or permanent housing — they’re not going back out on streets.”

While the facility is making a difference, it has limited resources, and the number of people who need help is far greater than its capacity. “Right now on the Monterey Peninsula, there is a huge need for any kind of transitional housing,” Litz reported.

According to Litz, there are more than 2,100 homeless people in Monterey County, and recent data indicates that 116 families don’t have roofs over their heads.

“About 10 percent of those are under 18,” she added. “Twenty-five percent are female.”

Sunday’s concert, which kicks off the fundraising campaign, starts at 1 p.m. Tickets are $25. The Monterey Fairgrounds are located at 2004 Fairground Road.

California American Water is hosting community workshops to discuss input received and share responses regarding the Monterey Peninsula Water Supply Project. All interested members of the community are encouraged to attend.

Free parking and refreshments available at each meeting. Families and children are welcome.

Flood risk is real

Dielh reminded everybody that flood risk at the site is a serious threat. “None of us are going to forget the flooding in Pajaro in 1995 and the difficulties the people who live there faced,” she said.

A retired civil engineer who has long been involved in conservation efforts in Pajaro, Kenn Reifler suggested the development could jeopardize a flood control project that’s in the works — and that Pajaro needs an evacuation plan first.

Kathryn Avila of the builder, Avila Construction, urged the planning commission to approve the housing plan.

“We’re in dire need of housing,” she said. “This project addresses that.”

Mike Avila of Avila Construction called it “long-awaited,” and said “a lot of work has gone into it.”

Another speaker, Sal Jimenez, agreed the county needs more housing and he urged planning commissioners not to “turn a blind eye to it.”

But others pushed the planning commission to put the brakes on. “What is the rush?” Pajaro resident Katherine Shaw asked.

“We need to make sure we can keep 480 people safe,” she added.

County planning commission rejects farmworker housing

By CHRIS COUNTS

Citing concerns about traffic, pedestrian safety, flood danger, earthquake risks, pesticide exposure and more, the Monterey County Planning Commission voted unanimously Wednesday to recommend denial of a plan to build housing for nearly 500 farmworkers in Pajaro.

Several planning commissioners apologized for voting against the housing, which they all agreed needs to be built somewhere.

“We desperately need housing, but we need it to be safe,” said planning commissioner Maria Dielh, who represents the 5th District. “I’m not convinced this is.”

Rio Vista Group LLC wants to build to four apartment buildings with a total of 60 eight-person units on 3.4 acres at the end of Susan Street. The site is located just south of the Santa Cruz-Monterey county line.

Susan Street is also home to a small community of longtime residents — many of whom have worked as farmworkers yet still oppose the development.

Pesticide worries rise

While most of the concerns raised during the Zoom hearing echoed those expressed at a March hearing, worries about pesticide exposure came as a surprise to many, including the applicant, whose representatives expressed frustration over the topic being raised “at the last minute.”

But Monterey County Agricultural Commissioner Henry Gonzales reported that a day earlier, he learned that the grower next door had decided to abandon organic farming and convert the land to conventional farming and use pesticides. “We believed the property would be organic and beyond. Stevenson president still on leave, upper school head steps in

STEVENSON SCHOOL’s board of trustees has appointed the head of the Pebble Beach campus to fill in for the president, who was placed on administrative leave in August pending an investigation into undisclosed “employee concerns.”

On Monday, Stevenson informed parents and employees of the Pebble Beach day and boarding school that its trustees appointed upper division head Daniel Griffiths to be acting president while Kevin Hicks is on “temporary administrative leave from his duties as president of the school.”

The “board has appointed Dr. Daniel Griffiths to serve as the acting president, and he has graciously accepted,” according to the chair of Stevenson’s board of trustees, David Colburn.

‘Leadership experience’
The school has been tightlipped about Hicks’ leave, only telling parents and The Pine Cone that he was benched pending an independent inquiry “into certain employee concerns.” Hicks, who graduated from Stevenson School in 1985, began as president in July 2015 after longtime school head Joseph Wandke retired.

Griffiths, who has been the head of the high school since 2017, “brings a wealth of leadership experience through his roles both at Stevenson and previously at the Catlin Gabel School, a distinguished independent day school in Portland, Ore.,” according to Colburn.

“The board is grateful for Dr. Griffiths’ willingness to step in and to help ensure the seamless operation of our school,” Colburn went on to say. “We are confident that with his leadership, and the full support of the senior leadership team, the regular work of the school will continue with excellence and distinction — in the classroom and across every area of our campuses.”

Stevenson’s Pebble Beach campus has students in grades 9-12, while its Carmel campus has students pre-kindergarten to 8th grade.

NOAA building to get historic review

By CHRIS COUNTS

THOSE WHO want to see the former NOAA building in Pacific Grove turned into a science and art center celebrated a unanimous vote Wednesday by the city’s historical resources committee to recommend that the city hire an expert to weigh in on whether the building, which was built in 1952 as a U.S. Navy training center, is historically significant.

Such a designation, if enacted by the city, would no doubt put hurdles in front of any effort to redevelop the property. The building was sold by Government Services Administration in April for $4.8 million. At the time, the buyer, North Carolina resident Tianzhi Chu, said he intended to turn the angular, concrete building into a home for his mother.

‘Important first step’

A local group, which calls itself COAST, wanted the federal government to donate the building so it could be turned into a science and environmental center. One of its leaders, Ken Parker, told The Pine Cone that the property is significant historically and culturally, and also provides critical habitat. Now that the property is privately owned, it’s not clear how such a donation could happen.

Nevertheless, “there are so many reasons why the property is important and should be preserved as a public resource,” Parker said. He called the vote to recommend hiring the consultant “an important first step.”

Congressman Jimmy Panetta is supporting the group’s efforts, and he previously criticized the federal Public Buildings Reform Board for failing “to engage with local stakeholders,” before selling the property.

An attorney for the Chu family, Jason Rettler, said the building does not meet the criteria of the California Register of Historic Resources, the National Register of Historic Places or Pacific Grove’s historic resource inventory.

He also contends the Government Services Administration reached out to 45 Native American tribes for comment about the pending sale and didn’t receive a response.

Located on 4.28 highly scenic acres at 1352 Lighthouse Ave. in Pacific Grove, the 11,200 square-foot building was a weather station for NOAA before being transferred to the GSA in 1965. In 2009, artist Ray Troll was commissioned to create a colorful 400-foot-long mural of sea life on the building. The effort cost taxpayers $120,000.

P.G. students create art on playground

By KELLY NIX

STUDENTS AT Forest Grove Elementary School in Pacific Grove upheld a school tradition last week when they created a large mural on the school’s blacktop.

This year’s theme was “pollinators and native California plants.” For years, students at the school have participated in Forest Grove’s Chalk Art Festival, which this month had them color in an elaborate art piece sketched and designed by artist Kim Kasner Stone. Stone worked with Amber Pacheco to organize the event.

“Kim chose this year’s pollinators and native California plants theme because she wanted students to see what animals help plants grow, and plants that are native to California,” Hetal Patel, a parent and the Forest Grove PTA’s vice president of fundraising, said.

Hundreds of students at Forest Grove Elementary School in Pacific Grove helped color this chalk art mural on the school’s blacktop last week.
BIG Lights, BIG Noise, BIG Crowds, BIG Hidden Facts

- 80-ft High Stadium Lights with light pollution reaching Carmel-by-the-Sea to Point Lobos.
- 400 practices & 124 athletic games - NOT just 6 football games.
- 2,000 spectators jamming Friday rush hour and impacting emergency vehicles.
- Safety Risk: no Emergency Access Routes. Will our kids be safe in nighttime chaos?
- Ripped out tennis courts for 18-foot roadway and new parking lots.
- Jeopardizing Monterey cypress/pine trees lining Scenic Highway 1.
- 2,400-sq.-ft spectator platform on top of a new storage building.
- Close to $1 MM spent-to-date and NO cost breakdowns included.

The legal process allows us to give feedback to the people responsible for this BIG mess!

- Please Email your questions, comments and recommendations (no limit) to: feedback@carmelunified.org
- AND Cut out and sign the letter below and mail it to arrive on or before October 10th, Columbus Day

Dear Superintendent Ted Knight,

We have serious concerns regarding your Environmental Impact Report. You are required to respond.

1. Show us the full impact of the light pollution on our treasured views and night skies.
   - Why limit the map to only a 3.5-mile radius on page 127/RDEIR? Show the truth!
   - Carmel-by-the-Sea, Carmel Valley, Jack’s Peak, Carmel Highlands, Point Lobos, Palo Corona, Mission Trails and Santa Lucia Preserve.

2. Stop surprises, the RDEIR includes significant NEW expanded construction projects.
   - Re-start community engagement with a legally required Scoping Session.
   - The 18-foot roadway, new parking lots and viewing platform don’t provide enough details.

   - CHS: 22-acres, land-locked campus, 968 students/staff, 276 parking spaces.
   - CMS: 60-acres permitting safe and responsible planning with 400 parking spaces now!

4. Prioritize implementing “Late Start”, a CA State Law benefiting ALL students.
   - Address the root cause of the delay and purchase more buses and hiring more drivers.
   - Other school districts like MPUSD have adopted the law with no lights - we should be able to as well.

5. Fix the light pollution emitting from the pool lights you installed without a legal process.
   - Install LED filters and use the lights as little as possible. Keep your promise from December 2021.

P.S. To School Board Members: Sara Hinds, Karl Pallastrini, Tess Arthur, Anne Marie Rosen, Seaberry Nachbar
   - Help shut down this plan due to pollution, safety and the impact on our community.

Lots of talk but little action planned in packed council agenda

By MARY SCHLEY

House numbers, paid parking, a new fire engine, state building codes, rules of conduct at public meetings, historic preservation and a few other issues make up a dense agenda planned for the city council’s Oct. 4 meeting, but most will involve no actual decisions, instead seeking “direction to staff.”

A six-page white paper telling the story of the city’s development since the 1880s era of Santiago Duckworth outlines the debate over house numbers and whether a street-address system should be implemented. Council members will be asked to prioritize “ensuring and maintaining the downtown post office in operation, a clear stand against implementing at-home mail delivery, and consideration of whether street address signs would be subject to specifically developed design standards” when they talk about what to do next.

On paid parking, which the city council has said it wants studied, city administrator Chip Rerig will ask when and how staff should take the next step of public outreach. “This public engagement is needed to thoroughly explain the need for paid parking and to design a program which is well-planned and meets the public’s expectation,” his report says. To that end, should it happen as soon as possible, or after newly elected officials are seated in 2023? Or should the new council be asked if it wants to go in another direction entirely?

Code updates

Building official Jerrel Laurie will offer a presentation on the 2022 editions of the California building, residential, electrical, green building standards, historic building, and existing building codes that take effect Jan. 1, 2023, and will discuss possible local amendments “addressing unique conditions and circumstances in the City of Carmel-by-the-Sea.”

Last spring, the council adopted an urgency ordinance requiring people to be vaccinated, boosted and masked to attend meetings of the city council and other legislative bodies in person, and mandating no more than 27 people be inside, in order to ensure social distancing. With those requirements long dead at many other public and private venues, the council is set to discuss withdrawing or changing the rules, but not to take any official action, which means they’ll remain in place for at least another month.

Filling vacancies

The city is having a hard time finding people to serve on the historic resources board, considering the rules state that three of its five members must be professionals in “1) history, architectural history, or urban design, (2) architecture or historic architecture, and (3) archaeology, anthropology, or paleontology.” In addition, they should be electors who live in the city. The council will consider whether to loosen those requirements to widen the pool of applicants. The HRB is one member short at the moment.

Council members are also set to consider changes to the policy on Mills Act contracts, which provide tax breaks to property owners who commit to preserving their historic structures.

Agenda items calling for actual action are Mills Act contracts for three historic properties in Seaside College Historic District for $880,000, and an ordinance allowing new employees to use accrued vacation and sick leave.

Association board, and Baron said residents might have their gripes, but the business community “is part of the fabric of Carmel.”

Asked what the city can do to better support businesses, Logan and Dramov focused on beautification — an oft-repeated topic in Dramov’s platform in particular — with Logan complaining about empty tree wells and Dramov noting shabby sidewalks and tripping hazards.

Businesses should be encouraged to contribute to the community, Stoddard said, and Baron said communication and collaboration are key.

What businesses does the city lack? Stoddard said the town needs a higher-end hotel to compete with the likes of the Lodge at Pebble Beach and Spanish Bay, but otherwise, “we’re kind of perfect.”

Baron focused on those that provide experiences, like bike rentals from Mad Dogs & Englishmen, since internet sales are impacting retail, and Dramov said the free market dictates downtown’s needs.

Perhaps unsurprisingly, considering his establishment is often the only one open until 2 a.m., Logan said the city needs more late-night activities, like live music, to keep people entertained. “When nightfall comes, they’re still looking for something to do,” he said.

Planning help

When asked how the planning department should streamline processes or otherwise facilitate businesses, Baron said it shouldn’t. “We have really strict regulations in town that keep Carmel special,” he said. “From my perspective, they are fine.”

Dramov said she’s heard complaints about permits taking too long but acknowledged that that phenomenon is “part of city government. Things don’t happen as quickly as you’d like.” Nonetheless, she said she’d have a conversation about it.

Logan said it’s up to planning director Brandon Swanson to answer that question, and Stoddard predicted the processes will improve.

“This is not the first time we’ve talked about it,” Dramov said when the topic of parking congestion arose. Her remark elicited laughter from the audience, and she went on to repeat her suggestions that employees park away from the business district, and that a garage be built in the north lot at Sunset Center.

“It’s rumored that my great-grandfather rode his horse up to Carmel Bakery and turned back around to go home because he couldn’t find parking,” Logan quipped, also prompting laughs.

People should stop complaining about parking and just deal with it, according to Logan. “We’ve tried every idea. There’s nothing new that anyone can present. The town gets busy.”

As a downtown gallery owner, Stoddard said parking is an issue for her, since people can’t find any will give up and leave. “That’s a loss of business, a loss of connection,” she said, and solutions would be building a garage, shutting employees and encouraging alternative forms of transportation, like bicycles. Stoddard also noted that every other Peninsula city charges for parking, which allows people to stay, shop, eat and drink for as long as they want.

“Too many cars come into town,” Baron said, but traffic could be cut by providing more bike racks and public transportation.

“There are a lot of cars, and there are a lot of ways to get hit by cars,” he added.

Not in error

After hearing about a new requirement that Carmel needs to pave the way for 349 new housing units over the next eight years to fulfill its share of the region’s needs, Logan said she thought the number must be wrong.

But when his subsequent research revealed otherwise, Logan concluded the best option is to fight it. “We don’t have the room for that,” he said. “It would be a health and safety risk to accommodate it.”

“Unfortunately, it is mandated,” Stoddard said, reiterating her idea that vacation homes, as well as houses with accessory dwelling units, could be used to meet that demand.

“That would build our community socially and economically,” she said. “If people have the space and want to put a dwelling there, let’s get it in front of it. I do believe there are some creative solutions.”

“We need to come together as a community to find a place where we can put these units,” Baron said, such as by further developing Sunset Center, repurposing Vista Lobos and replacing upstairs offices downtown. “This is something that affects every business and every person in this room.”

Dramov took aim at Stoddard’s suggestions as a potential violation of property rights and said she’d heard from residents “horrified” by the prospect of “being forced to open their homes to people.”

She suggested looking at city-owned properties for opportunities and repeated that Carmel Plaza’s top floor could be converted to residential.

“It could really transform downtown Carmel and make it an exciting, dynamic place,” she said.

Stoddard was next in line to speak on the next topic — the high percentage of vacation homes here — and took the opportunity to shoot down Dramov’s idea.

“I think some businesses in Carmel Plaza would be horrified to have residents in there,” she said. “There are a lot of high-end businesses in there.”

“Nobody here is taking away anyone’s private property rights,” Baron chimed in. “Carmel Plaza is a piece of private property, too, and I don’t understand how forcing Carmel Plaza to put in residential units will solve our housing issue.”

Baron said imposing an extra tax on the owners of second homes is “something for the community to decide,” while Dramov defended those with vacation homes here.

“People demonize second-home owners,” she said. “I don’t like making them the bad guy.”

And by the way, she said, she wasn’t saying Carmel Plaza should be compelled to add residential units, she was just suggesting the owner might be interested in the concept.

“The whole idea is preposterous,” Logan said, returning to the second-home tax that his landlord, Monaco business-~man Patrice Pastor, would certainly have to pay if it were imposed. “It’s a property owner’s right to not live in their house. When they come here to use it, it’s theirs, because they worked hard to get it.”

Pacaso had

They united in their disdain for fractional home ownership and Pacaso, which sells interests in homes to people who then take turns using the house.

“Pacaso is a business model that is anaheim to everything that belongs in town, and we should stamp it out,” Baron said, and Dramov noted that, for once, they agreed with him.

“Timeshares are even crazier than vacation rentals,” Stoddard said, and then took the opportunity to jump back into sparring over property rights.

“I never said anything about people taking rights away from property owners,” she said. “I was talking about incentivizing them.”

On the budget and how money should be spent, Dramov said she’s worried about pension costs, and Logan said more should be put in reserves, which are already quite healthy, and could also be spent on filling those previously mentioned empty tree wells.

Stoddard praised the city for passing a balanced budget — which is required by law — and Baron said the council needs to hear more from the public on how their tax dollars should be spent. “A lot of people have ideas about what they want to do with the budget, but very few people actually come and talk to us,” he said.

All the candidates said the chamber should get more tax dollars. Logan admitted he’s a member but would join “tomorrow.”

Finally, when asked what leadership skills they possess that make them the right choice, Stoddard pointed to her community involvement with local nonprofits, Baron said he’s a good listener and a good talker, Dramov said she’s a genuine person and a good listener, and Logan said he connects with billionaires and homeless people alike.

Celebrating over 35 years on the Peninsula
Rau has defended the post, telling The Pine Cone Sept. 13 that she made it after being upset over the Supreme Court’s decision to overturn Roe vs. Wade. She blamed organized religion for the court decision, saying “no religion has the right to dictate other people’s bodily autonomy.”

The Supreme Court’s decision, however, wasn’t based on religious considerations, but on the Constitution’s separation of powers, which doesn’t give the courts the power to make laws. Decisions about the legalization of abortion, the High Court ruled in June, have to be made by Congress and the state legislatures, not judges.

The DEI task force, Peake said, was formed to “exercise tolerance and acceptance of the DEI Task Force — which advocates for diversity and innovation,” while agreeing that “inappropriate behavior is derogatory and damages the perception of the city.”

Pacific Grove resident Mike Gibbs, who heads a new community group called PG Lives, which says it’s committed to “traditional values of strong families, vibrant businesses, and community service,” said Rau’s intolerant personal opinions are unacceptable, and do not reflect the positive values and aspirations of regular Pacific Grove citizens.”

“I am calling for her immediate resignation. Absent that, I’m calling for her removal ASAP from the task force by the mayor and the city council.”

“Buy a Bible, don’t read it, and you’ll be a Catholic,” Rau’s August Twitter post said. “Buy a Bible, read only what suits you and you will be an Evangelical.”

In the past week, Rau made her Twitter page private.

Nobody’s talking

In a letter Tuesday to members of the city council, resident Richard O’Mara questioned why Rau was made the DEI Task Force’s chair, and said she has demonstrated “with her writings that she in fact is the last person on the planet that should be doing something like this.”

He said Rau has “insulted” many PG residents with the “inappropriate rantings” about Catholicism and Christianity, and is not capable of being the head of the DEI.

“If you, mayor and council, to consider shutting down this task force of hate,” O’Mara said. “It has no place in our city.”

O’Mara, who says he’s lived in PG since 1978 and worked for the city, said he’s never heard any Pacific Grove resident complain about working, operating a business, participating in a full, rich life” in PG, “because of their race or ethnicity.”

Even if it’s determined that Rau’s social media post violated Pacific Grove’s city’s code of conduct, it would not be easy to remove her from the DEI task force. While members of that body and other city committees serve at the pleasure of the council, a council member would have to bring the issue forward and four of seven members would have to vote for her removal. Rau’s term on the council expires in January.

The Pine Cone sent questions to Rau this week but she did not respond. Questions were also sent to the chair of the Monterey County Democratic Central Committee, which endorsed Rau’s council candidacy, and the other members of the task force, but they were not answered.

Governor signs bills to curtail epidemic of catalytic converter thefts

By KELLY NIX

Governor Gavin Newsom this week announced a new law he said would reduce thefts of catalytic converters—which reduce the environmental effects of harmful gases from a vehicle's exhaust system. The devices have become prime targets from thieves who steal them from cars for the precious metals inside.

On Sept. 25, Newsom announced that he signed a pair of bills introduced by Democratic State Sen. Lena Gonzalez and Assemblyman Al Muratsuchi to close loopholes in existing laws related to the sales of catalytic converters. Newsom blamed brokers and "middle men" for paying "top dollar" for stolen parts.

"It will now be illegal to buy catalytic converters from anyone other than licensed auto dismantlers and/or dealers," Newsom told the press.

Records required

Existing law requires catalytic converter purchasers to maintain records of information regarding purchases of the devices. The new bill would require recyclers to include more details about the transaction, including the year, make and model of the vehicle from which the catalytic converter was removed. The idea is that it will be easier to trace thefts. The laws go into effect Jan. 1, 2023.

"You take away the market for stolen goods, you can help cut down on stealing," according to Newsom. "It’s not much more complicated than that."

Violation of Gonzalez’s bill, SB 1087, would be considered an infraction and punishable with a fine between $1,000 to $5,000, she said.

According to AAA, since 2019, catalytic converter thefts have increased 1,000 percent.

While almost any car could be a candidate for the thieves, SUVs and fleet vehicles have been the prime targets, according to AAA. Toyota Priuses are also targeted because they have two catalytic converters and more precious metals.

"Typically, recyclers will pay $50 to $250 per catalytic converter," AAA said in July. "Unfortunately for the victims of catalytic converter theft, the cost to replace the part could cost between $1,000 to $3,000, depending on the car or truck, and the vehicle may not be legal to drive until the part is replaced.

Catalytic converters contain precious metals, including platinum, palladium and rhodium, which help break down vehicle pollutants.

wings, the mural is about 36 feet by 52 feet."

Stone, whose 8-year-old son is a Forest Grove student, also designed the mural. She said the school’s chalk art festival is a great way for kids to “be outside, getting dirty and being creative together.”

“The beauty of the mural is that it’s not mine or yours, but it’s ours together, worked on by many incredible parents and nearly 400 students,” said Stone, who moved to Pacific Grove in 2018.

Last year, when students returned to the classroom after pandemic-prompted distance learning, the theme was “California fun in the sun,” which featured the beach, surfing, sea creatures, a rainbow and other beachy references.

To memorialize the mural, which will vanish during the next decent rainstorm, photographer Paul Black used a drone to capture the colorful artwork.

The Pine Cone has been a member of the Carmel Chamber of Commerce for more than 100 years.
Incorrectly represented
Dear Editor,

City council incumbent Jeff Baron incorrectly represented Stop Cell Towers in Carmel Neighborhoods at the CRA city council candidates forum last Wednesday. He implied our group’s name means we are for no cell service in Carmel neighbor- hoods. This is absolutely incorrect.

Let us be very clear: We are for cellular service, in the least intrusive means to our residential neighborhoods. In other words, we can have cellular service within facilities placed in front of our homes. It requires telecom companies to upgrade their existing facilities in commercial zones and macro towers to supply service.

Residents already have access to wired broadband for secure internet and cable streaming services with Wi-Fi routers for cellular service indoors and inexpensive boosters and extenders are available. And we have great service outdoors.

For many, their homes is their single greatest financial asset. Homeowners located near cell towers have no way to indemnify themselves from injury or property damage from cell tower falling impacts or electrical fire. Cell towers are out of scale, out of character, unneces- sary, redundant, noisy, unsafe, create view impacts and a visual blight that degrades our neighborhoods. Many people have radiation health concerns. The general estimated property devaluation of living next to a cell tower is 20 percent.

Stop Cell Towers in Carmel Neighborhoods stands together with our city: “The stated goal of these ordinances is to protect residential communities and property owners only reinforcing the beach for the worse. Too many people have a great disregard for the beach, the sand, and the walkway.”

The argument that the romanticism and tradition of warming beach fires is something that has to be continued does not take into consideration the value of the white sand that the beach once was.

Go for a walk. Wear layers. Stop the fires. People are too irresponsible when partying on the beach. Too many times I have picked up bags of garbage (glass, food, cans, cigarette butts, doggie poop bags, etc.) after the nights of people partying on the beach.

I am not a NIMBY. I am a local who values the towns I live and work in. Time to stop the fires and desecration of the beach.

Mike Cate, Carmel

Disappointed
Dear Editor,

Do you remember how you feel when an old friend tells you something that is not true? Disappointed. That is how I felt after reading the editorial “No more nominations, please,” in a recent Pine Cone. The article was about the fictitious NIMBY Hall of Fame which the winner being the Carmel residents who oppose lighting the local football stadium. The majority of Carmel residents who have already experienced some of the effects of large crowds attending high school events. Perhaps this can be mitigated, but it cannot be scored as NIMBY nonsense. I suspect the high school will get its lights like the Pebble Beach Company prevailed over concerned property owners only reinforcing taxpayers’ loss of trust in governance and the press.

Hy Rothstein, Pebble Beach

Keep natural gas
Dear Editor,

The California Air Resources Board has recently approved a ban on natural gas furnaces and heaters. The unanimous decision aims to phase out the sale of natural gas space and water heaters by 2030. California is the first state in the country to try such a ban. Heating your home with an all-electric heater puts more of a strain on our already fragile power system.

Mike Cate, Carmel

‘Time to stop the desecration’
Dear Editor,

I would like to voice my opinion that beach fires need to be eliminated completely.

I have lived here my entire life and have watched the beach attract more and more people due to its beauty, and at the same time watched the amount of garbage and lack of concern for the beach environment change the beach for the worse. Too many people have a great disregard for the beach, the sand, and the walkway.

The argument that the romanticism and tradition of warming beach fires is something that has to be continued does not take into consideration the value of the white sand that the beach once was.

But there are also some limitations in the bill regarding their movement. For instance, wild pigs can’t be fenced in or trapped with devices that grip their bodies in any way — not all traps have claws on them — and lights can’t be used to hunt them at night. Also, nonlead ammunition must be used with in the range of the California condor, which includes Monterey County.

“This really focuses on the explosion of the population of pigs in recent years,” Groot told The Pine Cone. “Because of the drought, they’ve come out of the hills in search of food and water. It’s a huge concern if they get into a vineyard or a production field. We want to make it easier for farm operators and land managers to take care of problems in fairly easy manner — it’s an important issue.”

Groot that it would be helpful if we had a little wet weather, too. “What we really need is rain, because then they’ll stay up in the hills,” he added.

 Experts say there are as many as 400,000 wild pigs in the state, where they cause “numerous environmental and public health problems,” according to Dodd. The bill lifts remaining hunting restrictions, allowing for “better population control.”

ROBERT WILLIAM COWDREY
June 10, 1948 — September 7, 2022

Born in Nuremberg, Germany, to Lt. Col. Charles Howard and Catherine (Quass) Cowdrey, Bob moved with his family to his father’s new posting at Fort Ord, CA before another assignment took them to White Sands, NM. Upon his father’s retirement from the U.S. Army, they returned to the Monterey Peninsula, settling in Del Rey Oaks. Bob often recounted tales of his happy, adventurous boyhood, which tested parental limits, until he graduated from Monterey High School in 1968.

Bob began his 50-year career of service, first by joining the U.S. Army in early 1969, where he was posted at the West German border and trained under the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers. He came home after his honorable discharge to work in the hospitality industry and was initially hired by Del Monte Hyatt in 1971, with a later transfer to their Birmingham, AL, property. Bob returned to the peninsula to join Doubletree Hotels in the opening of their Monterey property (now the Portola Hotel and Spa), working closely with the City of Monterey and the newly opened Monterey Conference Center. In 1979, Bob moved across the street to join the new ownership of the Hotel San Carlos (now the site of Monterey Marriott), a property recently purchased by a group of local businessmen. These last two enduring, important relationships would be significant to Bob’s future efforts, relative to revitalizing downtown Monterey.

Having always worked in hotel operations, Bob took the opportunity to change his career path to sales and marketing, which meant new experiences and travel. He expanded his resort/convention sales expertise by accepting jobs in Palm Springs; Jackson Hole, WY; Grand Rapids, MI; and San Francisco. Then a chance was offered to move back to the Monterey Peninsula to be closer to his family and, for the next 23 years, the Pebble Beach Company was “home.” Initially hired for the 1987 opening of The Inn at Spanish Bay, he was invited to join the impressive pool of talent at Pebble Beach Resorts for the next 20 years. Bob managed sales, marketing and conference services, as well as being integral to the planning and success of numerous world-class special events. He departed from the company as Senior Vice President of Sales and Marketing in 2007.

During his early years at PB Resorts, Bob met Karen Pennell (Golf Division Office Manager) and their romance began while playing on the same winning company softball team. They married at Carmel Valley Ranch on September 9, 1989, and Vanessa was born that December. Bob celebrated the birth of his daughter with John Chadwell, Pebble Beach Company president, at The Inn’s New Year’s Eve extravaganza and both were denied entry into CHOMP at midnight to visit her due to excessive jubilation (fueled by a few celebratory toasts). Bob and John shared a special bond at work and in play; their family became our family.

After leaving the employ of PB Resorts, Bob continued to work for Pebble Beach Company as a consultant to help, primarily, with the planning of the 2010 U.S. Open at Pebble Beach, his third championship (1992 and 2000). In the fall of 2009, Cowdrey was hired as the interim CEO of the Monterey County Convention and Visitors Bureau and led the search to hire a permanent replacement.

In 2011, an opportunity to go back downtown was presented to Bob – a position he couldn’t refuse: general manager of the Monterey Conference Center. It was sweet irony to work again with the city and its hotel community... truly, “an opportunity of a lifetime” to be united in the refocus: general manager of the Monterey Conference Center. It was sweet irony to work again with the city and its hotel community... truly, “an opportunity of a lifetime” to be united in the downtown upon completion of construction in January 2018.

During his tenure, Bob also assisted with the Leon Panetta Lecture Series in many capacities, working closely with Defense Secretary Leon and Sylvia Panetta, to end their busy day with a successful evening of poignant conversation at the Monterey Conference Center and, later, the Carmel Sunset Center.

In 2016, Bob was proud to receive the honor of Person of the Year from the Monterey County Hospitality Association and was celebrated in 2017 at their annual dinner. Following his career path, it is easy to understand why Bob connected with so many people of different walks of life, professional positions and talents.

From being ringside, emotional support crew as dedicated “Show Dad” during Vanessa’s equestrian career to taking care of the Panetta’s beloved dog, Bravo, during lecture series evenings, Bob’s calming presence spanned all scales of need; his kindness and humor greatly easing the tensest of situations.

Bob is predeceased by his parents, as well as sister and brother-in-law, Lois and Ken Hansen. Missing him now are: Big Brother Don Cowdrey (Mary Paul); wife, Karen Cowdrey; children: Kris Cowdrey (Pilar), Jeremy Cowdrey (Jane and Family), Vanessa Cowdrey, numerous dear nieces and nephews and sisters-in-law. Always ready to tell a story, share a laugh, and offer a piece of wisdom or hard-up, his friends and family will feel his absence. The love expressed for Bob has bolstered our family during this difficult time. We have been blessed because of his generosity and we will live his example by offering kindness to others in our journey until we, too, return to stardust.

Cremation and interment arrangements are being coordinated by The Paul Mortuary, with a graveside ceremony and military color guard being planned at El Carmelo Cemetery, Pacific Grove. In lieu of flowers, or to honor Bob’s memory, please donate to: Monterey Jazz Festival (www.montereyjazzfestival.org/jazz-education), Rancho Cielo, Elkhorn Slough Foundation, or Point Lobos Foundation.

We thank everyone for their condolences, shared memories, and support.

Roy David Lorenz

Roy David Lorenz, October 23, 1929 – April 3, 2022
Monterey, CA

At the age of 13, Roy Lorenz obtained his parents’ consent to enlist in the United States Navy during World War II. He wanted to serve, to volunteer, and to help make his community and his country a better, safer place. So began a long, meaningful life of volunteerism and a career in human relations that meshed well with his friendly, people-oriented disposition and desire to serve others.

Born to John and Regina Lorenz in Philadelphia, PA, Roy was the youngest of four siblings, an honors graduate of Northeast High School, Philadelphia, and the first member of his family to attend college. He received his bachelor’s degree in 1955, using the GI Bill to pay for much of his education at The College of William and Mary in Williamsburg, VA. He later earned his master of science degree in personnel management with Nestle Foods in Salinas.

Professionally, Roy spent most of his career in human relations with McCormick and Company, Inc., first in Baltimore, MD, then in its Schilling Division in Salinas, becoming manager of human relations in 1967. He closed out his professional career in personnel management with Nestle Foods in Salinas.

Roy transitioned easily to retirement, pouring his calm demeanor and gregarious personality into 25 years

Local DAR chapter celebrates 100th year

THE COMMODORE Sloat chapter of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution celebrated its 100th anniversary on Sept. 29.

According to the national organization, its more than 190,000 members can claim direct descent from “a patriot of the American Revolution” — a designation which includes soldiers and sailors, civil servants, elected officials or any of a wide variety of people who supported the Revolutionary cause.

The local chapter was organized in Pacific Grove but moved to Monterey in recognition of that city’s historic significance.

Over the years, its many activities have included preserving local history through placing markers, preserving important papers and official documents, and encouraging young people to learn more about the past through essay contests and other activities.

It also honors women who have made significant contributions to their communities with its Women in American History awards. Veterans are another focus. In 1969, according to the group’s records, it “held a monthly party at Fort Ord Hospital for soldiers wounded in Vietnam.”

That work continues, as the chapter contributes items for active duty soldiers and veterans in various medical facilities.

Past and future

Since 2005, the chapter has held its annual Ancestor Roundup, a multigenerational genealogy symposium, and in June, members participated in the dedication of a marker “for Spanish patriot Ignacio Vincente Vallesio at San Carlos Cathedral in Monterey,” a press release noted.

Regent (chapter president) Cynthia Stormer said that although the group’s mission is rooted in preserving the past, “we are more excited to welcome the future!” For more information, visit monterey.californiadar.org.

CAROL LOU WHITE MARCHETTE 1929-2022

Carol Lou Marchette of Pebble Beach, CA died peacefully on Friday, September 2, 2022, at the age of 93 with her husband, sons, daughter and son-in-law at her side.

Carol’s was a life to be celebrated and admired. Born in 1929 in Ashbury, Missouri, Carol was the daughter of Howard and Ellen White. She grew up in Calaveras County, in California’s gold country, where she met her husband, Bud Marchette, during her sophomore year of high school. Carol and Bud married on August 11, 1951, in Murphys, CA. They raised two sons, Steve and Bruce, and a daughter, Janet. Carol received her teaching degree from San Jose State in 1952 and taught elementary school.

Over the years Carol created a warm and loving home for her family wherever Bud’s career took him. They lived in locales as diverse as Sacramento, CA, Anchorage, AK, Midland, TX, Jakarta, Paris, Tehran, Dhahran, Bangkok, Kuala Lumpur and Singapore before retiring in Pebble Beach in 1984.

In Bangkok in 1982 she was introduced to ikebana which became a passion. She was a founding member of the Monterey Bay Chapter and attended many international and regional conferences. In 1983 Carol and Bud joined the Monterey Peninsula Country Club where they enjoyed many years of golf as well as establishing many lifelong friendships.

She will be remembered by her family for being a fabulous cook and baker and for her passion for travel and adventure. Her grandchildren will always remember and cherish their month-long grand adventures and summer vacations at Silver Lake, CA.

Carol was a beloved wife, mother, aunt, grandmother and great-grandmother, and will be greatly missed by her family and friends. A private service will be held for family in Murphys, CA.

ARNOld SARMANIAN 1923-2022

Arnold Sarmanian, 99-1/2 years of age, a World War II veteran, and auto enthusiast, left this earth at his home in Charleston, S.C. on the evening of September 19, 2022.

Son of the late Veronica and Stephen Sarmanian, and brother of the late Gregory (interred at Arlington National Cemetery), Arnold was married 63 years to the late Margaret Frances Sarmanian (Bonomo) and is survived by his son, Stephen and his wife, Janis; daughter, Margaret Veronica Sarmanian and late husband James W. Hebert; Arnold was grandfather to Jeremy Sarmanian and his wife, Mackenzie; and Sarah Hendrix and husband, Ben; and great-grandfather to Connor and Maggie Sarmanian.

Arnold graduated from Northeastern University with a B.S. and Boston University with an M.S. after serving in both theaters of WWII — Europe and the Pacific. He worked on weapons systems development and human factoring at Raytheon Technologies.

Originally from Waltham, MA, Arnold enjoyed his retirement in Monterey, CA, Nantucket, MA, Palm Desert, CA, and more recently in Charleston, S.C. Arnold will be interred at Mt. Feake Cemetery, Waltham, MA aside his parents on October 29, 2022, in a private ceremony.

In lieu of flowers a donation to a veterans’ organization of your choice in his name is appreciated.

JOHN T. BOHLMAN

Pebble Beach

A husband, father, brother, grandfather, friend — John T. Bohlman — aka JB, Johnny B, Mr. B, Grandpa Dude, left this earth on August 20th at the age of 86. In true 28 form, he departed after an amazing drive on the 17th hole of the Shore Course at Monterey Peninsula Country Club with his friends. Golf was his passion along with his love of cars, sailing, fishing, tennis, skiing and dominoes, even the occasional horse ride.

John was born in Portland, Oregon, in 1936 to Ted and Bayballe Bohlman. He is the younger brother to Susan Callaghy, who has the most beautiful blue eyes and zeal for life.

John grew up in Oregon. He attended Ainsworth Elementary and Lincoln High School. He was a proud Phi Delta at the University of Oregon and an avid Duck fan. John was stationed at Fort Ord and fell in love with the Monterey Peninsula. After finishing his military duty he started working for Tidewater Oil Company in the San Francisco Bay area and then Phillips Petroleum. John returned to Monterey County and started his own oil distributing company and soon partnered up with George Hill in 1972 to create Toro Petroleum, a successful business in Salinas.

John met his first wife, Diane, in 1960 and they had three children, Anna, Lynn and Jonathan, whom they raised in Carmel. John was self-made and provided a beautiful life for his family. He was a local resident for over 60 years. John enjoyed spending time at the Beach Club, the Old Capital Club and especially Monterey Peninsula Country Club. He was remarried in 2005 to Catherine “Kitty” Cullen, his adoring wife of 17 years. John embraced her children and grandchildren as his own.

John lit up the room and was the life of the party with his jovial spirit. He was a good listener and very engaging. He had a contagious laugh, a warm smile and a twinkle in his eye. He made all of those around him feel loved and valued. Through his magnetic charisma, he was able to connect and inspire people of all ages.

John was not afraid to take risks, try new things, live in the moment and love those around him. His greatest joy was being “grandpa dude.” He adored his family and played affectionately with his grandchildren. He taught us all the importance of unconditional love and living life to its fullest. John was a gift to all who knew him. He loved nature especially, birds and “a good view” whether from Tahoe, Big Sur, Carmel Valley, or Pebble Beach. John took the time to appreciate the details and now he is enjoying the views from above. He will be dearly missed.

John is survived by his wife, Kitty Bohlman; and his children, Anna (Fred), Lynn (Justin and grandchildren Izzie and Luka), and Jonathan (Jessica and grandchildren Ellis, Ii and Brynn). He is also survived by his children Matt (China and grandchildren Liam, Caroline, and Ryan), and her daughter Tara (Albert and Charlotte), and his sister, Susan Callaghy and multiple nieces and nephews.

A service for family and friends will be held at 1 p.m. October 21st at the Church In The Forest, at 3152 Forest Lake Road, Pebble Beach, followed by a reception.

In lieu of flowers, donations to Casa of Monterey County are appreciated. Funeral arrangements by Struve and Laporte Funeral Home.
Padres’ new cross country coach hopes to end 14-year drought

O NE OF the most decorated cross country schools in Northern California history hasn’t won a Central Coast Section championship since 2008, the year most of today’s high school freshmen were born. The new coach at Carmel High, a Monterey County running great, believes his Padres can end that 14-year drought in November.

Daniel Tapia, who represented Team USA at the 2013 World Marathon Championships in Moscow (after placing fourth that year in the Boston Marathon), and the first county native to win the Monterey Bay Half Marathon (2017), believes Carmel’s girls can run with — and maybe away from — any team in the section, and thinks the boys can also be title contenders this season.

Doing things differently

“I feel lucky to have stepped into an excellent situation, with a really good group of kids, and I’ve been pushing them harder in practice than they’ve probably ever run before,” said Tapia, a North County High alumnus who set school records at Hartnell College in the 5,000- and 10,000-meter runs. “I’m also doing some other things differently.”

Why Tapia chose Carmel

As the new coach of the Padres, Tapia — still a competitor himself — sees every competition leading up to the CCS and state meets as training exercises — a philosophy he employed as the coach of the PCAL champion in 800 and 1,600, and fourth-place qualifier in the 3,200.

“During the summer, Moises was training with other top runners in our area, including Aiden Tarantino, who started bringing other Carmel kids with him,” said Tapia. “I recognized that these guys were showing up when they didn’t have to be there, so when I learned that Carmel was searching for a coach, it seemed like a job I should look into.”

As the new coach of the Padres, Tapia — still a competitive runner at 35 — works out with his athletes at nearly every practice.

“It keeps me in shape, it’s a lot of fun, and it’s basically a ‘boots on the ground’ approach to coaching,” he said. “I run with the fastest and slowest runners on the team, which gives me a lot of data on how everybody’s breathing, whether they’re running hard enough, or if they’re running too hard — it’s a win-win.”

Another change, according to the coach, is that Tapia sees running the team as training exercises — a philosophy he employed Sept. 15 at the first league race, a PCAL Center Meet, at Carmel Valley’s new Palo Corona Cross Country Course. “I treat these center meets as a preseason game,” he said. “We’ll basically use those, and all of our dual meets, as practice runs. What I really care about is consistency and state, which don’t come up until the end of November.

“I’m not worried about our top two or three girls and guys — I want to help the back three or four run a little bit faster,” Tapia said.

Despite a mandate from their coach to run together at a 7-minute-mile pace at that Palo Corona event, Tapia’s girls easily won the meet, beating second-place San Benito by 8 points in the Gabilan Division race.

Individually, Carmel girls placed fifth (Ghio, a sophomore), sixth (freshman Lila Glazier), eighth (sophomore Chiara Krivtik, and ninth (sophomore Christiana Krivtik) in the meet. Carmel boys placed 13th in the meet.

4 race in 2021, led by a freshman, Ava Ghio, who was seventh overall, and a sophomore, Christiana Krivtik, who was ninth, plus five others who were among the top 27 to the finish line. Only one was a senior.

Carmel’s boys took fourth in Division 4 (behind Scotts Valley, Menlo and Archbishop Riordan), paced by juniors Aiden Tarantino, who was sixth to the finish line, and Dylan Craig, who placed 10th. Three more juniors and two freshmen were among the top 54 in the 93-runner field.

The Padre girls went on to place 17th at state.

Tapia assisted last spring with Palma High’s track team, coaching distance runners, including then-senior Moises Benito, the PCAL champion in 800 and 1,600, and fourth-place qualifier in the 3,200. He was also league champion and fourth at CCS in cross country.

in the six-school battle.

Carmel boys, under orders to run together at a 6-minute pace, placed fourth as a team, without a top-10 individual finisher.

Two days later, competing against 10 other teams at North County’s 3-mile Jackie Henderson Memorial, the Padres boys placed second to Scotts Valley, paced by Tarantino (fourth, time: 15:36), freshman Mack Aldi (sixth, 15:47), Craig (seventh, 15:51) and senior Tyler Imamura (12th, 16:23).

Carmel’s girls also took second to Scotts Valley as a team, led by Ghioto (fourth, 18:13), Glazer (sixth, 19:00), senior Marina Hobson (14th, 19:58), and the Kvittek sisters, Christiana (17th, 20:07) and Chiara (19th, 20:20).

Stevenson and Santa Catalina have tasted CCS glory through the years and are anticipating successful seasons this fall. Both teams will compete in the PCAL’s Mission Division.

Catalina starts strong

Santa Catalina’s CCS history includes first-place trophies in 1987 and ’88 (Division 3), and 2012 (Division 5), and this year’s squad made a serious statement at Division 3, and 2012 (Division 5), and this year’s squad made a serious statement at Division 4 champions in 2009 and 2010. The Pirates were also section runners-up (each time to York) in 1988, 1989 and 1999. The girls team won the CCS crown in 1989 and 1996, and was runner-up in 1997.

Stevenson’s girls and boys teams each placed fourth in Division 5 a year ago. Gone from the boy’s team is John Puka, a senior who placed seventh in the section in 2021, but CCS veteran Marcus Finley is returning this year as a sophomore.

Finley, 18th in the section as a freshman, fired a shot across the Mission Division’s bow with a second-place finish (fourth overall, including Gabilan runners) at the season-opening center meet at Palo Corona, covering the hilly course in 17:52.4.

Another returning sophomore is Alesha Kvittek, (left) and her sister, Christiana, will help the Padres pursue a CCS championship this season.

Stevenson’s girls will be paced by sophomores Amy Rong, who was 12th overall in the first meet of the year, and senior Lydia Yu, who was 34th. Rong (25th at CCS), senior Lydia Yu (32nd), and sophomore Julia Antonius (33rd) are other veterans for the Pirates.

Carmel, Catalina, and Stevenson competed Thursday at Toro Park in the second center meet of the year and will race each other again Oct. 13 in the third center meet at Natividad in Salinas. Carmel High has additional competitions Oct. 8 at the Asics Invitational in Clovis, Oct. 15 at the Terry Ward Bellarmine Invitational in San Jose, and Oct. 21-22 at the Mt. SAC Cross Country Invitational in Walnut.

This year’s PCAL championships will be held at the Palo Corona Cross Country Course on Oct. 29. CCS’ big race is Nov. 12 at Crystal Springs in Belmont, and the state meet is Nov. 26 at Woodward Park in Fresno.

Time for the coastal commission to support new water

BACK IN the days when California’s entire web of land use regulations was designed to prevent development — especially along the coast — the Monterey Peninsula’s water shortage functioning as one of the most powerful tools in the local anti-development arsenal, because no matter how many approvals a property owner might eke out from their local planning commission and city council, they still couldn’t start building until someone let them have water. Around here, the meant the Twelfth of Never.

Our water shortage has had the kind of staying power that makes statutes like the Coastal Act and CEQA seem weak by comparison. Laws can always be amended or even rescinded by the same legislative body that passed them, but nobody can decree water into existence. To get taps flowing again, you not only need a long list of government approval, but large amounts of capital combined with technical expertise. Building something is much more complicated than passing a law.

Which explains why, even with Sacramento suddenly reversing course last year and requiring new housing to be built in large numbers, the wild card in the Peninsula is whether the water will ever be made available to allow the state’s new housing mandates to come to fruition. Carmel-by-the-Sea, we’re told, is supposed to provide about 350 new housing units, but without water to supply them, none will ever become reality.

Meanwhile, after almost 30 years of a moratorium on new water meters, Cal Am, the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District and their water-regulating brethren still haven’t been able to agree on a way to let local residents start adding water fixtures to their homes or supply the Peninsula’s existing lots of record — much less accommodate significant numbers of newly mandated units.

Cal Am says a new desal plant is the only way to supply the water this community will need, while the water board says an expanded reclamation plant will suffice. Either way, the more water we have, the more housing we’ll get. Supposedly, the State of California is 100 percent in favor of greatly expanded housing opportunities through the state, including the Monterey Peninsula’s quiet single-family neighborhoods. But does the state mean it?

An important test will come at the California Coastal Commission’s Nov. 17 meeting in Salinas. Starting almost on the day it was founded, the coastal commission could be relied on to oppose all new development along the coast. They did it in the name of “resource protection” — all other considerations, such as the housing supply, be damned. Now that the legislature and the governor have adopted an aggressively pro-housing stance, will the coastal commission go along? We certainly hope so.

A warmer planet promises to be a wetter one, but that’ll be no help to the housing-starved young people and blue collar workers of the Peninsula, because we are barred from using most of the water that flows down the Carmel River.

Instead of more rain, we need a flood of common sense to descend on the people in the state capitol — and now from the coastal commission — clearing the way for us to also use water from the sea.
C.C. Belmont — a hospitality pro or a check-bouncing con?

CLAUD CAVENDISH Belmont, who once briefly owned the Pine Inn, was an interesting man who lived for a short time in Carmel but garnered a lot of local news in the first half of 1914. Piecing together the Belmont story, we find a man who traveled a lot and worked only occasionally, mostly as a hotel man — or perhaps a con man.

Records indicate he was born in Scotland in 1860, and first came to the United States in 1901. He applied for citizenship and married Caroline Price in Minnesota. The 1908 San Francisco Polk City Directory shows Claud and Caroline had moved to Long Beach, where he was proprietor of the Taloma Hotel.

Soon after, they began a series of ocean voyages that can’t be fully documented. They returned to San Francisco on Sept. 14, 1913, after boarding in Maui, New Zealand. The ship’s manifest recorded their ultimate destination as Spokane, Wash., and indicated that Belmont’s career was hotelkeeper. If the couple made it to Spokane, they didn’t stay long, as they again arrived in San Francisco on Oct. 15, 1913, this time from Honolulu. The San Francisco Chronicle reported that this return to California was after an absence of more than a year.

Busy fellow

In late 1913, Belmont seems to have put many irons into the fire. The 1914 San Francisco Polk Directory shows he and his wife were living at 1523 Laguna St., and he was the proprietor of the Liliane Apartments. Concurrently, the same directory shows them as proprietors of the Hotel Belmont at 946 Third St. Belmont ran a full-page ad in that directory, indicating that the Belmont had previously been Hotel Batavia.

Further, the Monterey Daily Cypress announced on March 1, 1914, “Pine Inn, at Carmel-by-the-Sea, has changed hands, Mrs. Wingate having disposed of her interests in that famous hostelry to C.C. Belmont, who, with his estimable wife as his partner, took over the management yesterday afternoon.” The story went on to report Belmont was “a hotel man of wide experience” who was interested in running a chain of hotels in America, and that he owned “a large caravansary in New Zealand.”

Belmont quickly built a number of relationships to supply the needs of Pine Inn and its dining room. Carmel’s Ledig Bros. grocery, Goody livery, and Schwengerin bakery each provided him goods and services on credit, as did Wood Bros., a Monterey butcher.

Suspicious circumstances

Abruptly, Belmont’s plans for the Pine Inn changed. With the assistance of a San Francisco realtor, he sold the inn to William Watson, closing the deal on Wednesday, May 27, 1914. Belmont owned Pine Inn for less than three months.

The afternoon of the sale, the Belmont purchased a new cut from Winston Bros. of Monterey and then visited his local creditors, providing them checks for what he owed. He told many of them of his plans to travel to Scotland, after a visit with friends in San Jose over the Memorial Day weekend. Early the next morning, Belmont went to Monterey’s First National Bank to close out his local affairs. He provided the bank with an address in Long Beach and said to contact him there if any bills had been overlooked. He then left with a check for $2,553.47, which he deposited in Citizens National Bank.

backyard studio at her home above Carmel Valley Road. “Drawing was my first love as an artist, and I still have a passion for it.”

Early beginnings

A drawing instructor began coming to Greene’s home in Cranston, R.I., to give her private lessons when she was 10 — the same age at which she also started learning classical piano from a private teacher.

“I had a wonderful childhood — lots of family love, lots of friends and lots of fun, growing up in a great neighborhood with big old Victorian houses. I could see Narragansett Bay from my house,” she said.

Her aunt, Dorothy, was married to Fred Friendly, president of CBS News and co-creator (with Edward R. Murrow) of the iconic documentary series, “See It Now.”

“We’d go to New York as a family, and Fred would get tickets to a Broadway musical — I saw ‘My Fair Lady’ and ‘Irma La Douce’ as a preteen,” she recalled.

“We went to the New York World’s Fair and had all sorts of wonderful cultural experiences.”

Painting clock faces

Greene had natural talent as an artist, which, at age 13, inspired a partnership with her father, a second-generation clock maker and watch repairman.

“He asked me to start painting the faces of his clocks,” she said. “His dad had died, and his widow had given my father patterns for all of the different clock faces. So, I took the whole pile and taught myself how to do it.”

Greene was living at her father’s workbench as a child, viewing the world through the prisms of colorful glass “gems” she was twirling in front of her eyes.

“I’d say my love of color began there, and with the magical wonderland of autumn in New England,” she said.

Greene also developed a youthful fascination with the delicate contours of the repair tools that her father and grandfather used. She sometimes still uses them.

At 14, she was accepted into the Rhode Island Governor’s School for Youth in the Arts, a 10-week summer program, along with her 15-year-old boyfriend, David Cloutier, an aspiring poet.

But while Greene enjoyed art as a child and teen, she adored piano.

“I was ready to just quit school and spend my entire life practicing every day, playing piano,” she said. “My teacher was groomsing me to be a concert pianist, so I became a member of the Conservatoire [music] Club and performed Mozart, Beetho- ven, Liszt, Rachmaninoff, Chopin and Lecuona.

“I got really good — neighbors sometimes would stop as they walked past our house and listen to me practice after school.”

Performance anxiety

Unfortunately, performing onstage felt so stressful at age 17 that she called her teacher and told him she had decided to go to art school.

“I thought it broke his heart. He hung up on me, and that was the end of that, after seven weeks of weekly lessons,” she said. “I was stunned, and felt bad, but I was happy with my decision — and it was the right decision. I breathed art in high school and won many awards.”

She spent part of her 17th summer in Vermont.

Don’t miss “Scenic Views” by Jerry Gervase — every week in the Real Estate Section.
During World War II, Ray Ramos enlisted in the Army and went to basic training at Fort Belvoir, Va., not far from his home. A fellow recruit pulled him aside one day, and asked to speak with him privately — behind a nearby pile of coal that helped heat the barracks. The man’s young wife had sent him a letter, and he was ashamed to admit that he didn’t know how to read or write. Ramos read the letter to him and then wrote a response as his new friend dictated it. After training was over, he never saw the man again.

When you talk to Ramos, even briefly, it becomes obvious why, out of all the men that recruit could have confided in, he chose him. He’s approachable, soft-spoken and an excellent listener, and if you extrapolate a little, it’s obvious that he probably pretty darned unflappable, too.

Ramos, who turned 100 on Aug. 29, lives with Mer- edith, his wife of 50 years, near the Forge in the Forest. That’s a long way from his boyhood home in Washing- ton, D.C. During the Depression, he also lived on a fam- ily dairy farm in Virginia, not far from Mount Vernon.

He would later be involved in the D-Day invasion on the shores of Normandy, but as a youngster, he had to milk the cows. Lots of cows.

He was the oldest of four children. With one of his brothers, he milked 60 cows, twice a day, seven days a week.

While he worked on the farm, Ramos discovered that he loved building things, like additions to barns, and sta- bles for horses. He might have inherited some of that from his father, who worked as a machinist on the railroads, building things for horses. He might have inherited some of that from his brothers. He might have inherited some of that from the man who taught him to read. Ramos said, “I thought, ‘I was the only one that was that was all that was left of the man. The soldier’s rifle was nearby, with ‘a picture of a pretty young girl and a baby,’ which had been attached to the gun’s stock and covered in heavy plastic.

Despite the heat of battle, Ramos said, “I thought, ‘I hope that woman will meet a young man who will respect her and adopt that child.’”

He said the scene was every bit as hectic, confused and bloody as it’s been portrayed in the movies. At one point, Ramos said, he dove for cover behind a comrade’s legs, only to discover that was all that was left of the man. The soldier’s rifle was nearby, with “a picture of a pretty young girl and a baby,” which had been attached to the gun’s stock and covered in heavy plastic.

Despite the heat of battle, Ramos said, “I thought, ‘I hope that woman will meet a young man who will respect her and adopt that child.’”

After the initial assault, the engineers’ mission was to clear the beaches of mines and explosives so that more sol- diers — and eventually armored vehicles — could come ashore. Ramos described phone poles that were driven into the ground at 45-degree angles, with large mines dangling from them just the right height to take out landing craft. “A soldier was standing at the end of the pole, and the pole came down on top of him,” Ramos said.

Ramos and his team set up a deep hole, using explosives, to blow up mines. They set up a system of lights, which were put up on top of the mines. As the Allies moved inland, the engineers turned to building roads and bridges, and restoring water sup- plies. Months later, “We built the longest tactical bridge ever constructed,” more than 1,000 feet across the Rhine River, in “a full day and one night,” Ramos said, noting that they had practiced the procedure many times before they carried it out.

He and his soldiers also fought in the Battle of the Bulge in December 1944, and the 254th Combat Engineer Battalion, with which Ramos served, received a citation for “determination, heroism and esprit de corps.” It reads, “Although armed with only small arms, machine guns, and rocket launchers, the battalion successfully resisted several vicious attacks by armored infantry and tanks.” It goes on to say that the Americans’ position was overrun, but the battalion’s remaining members continued to fight for nine hours, cutting off other routes of the Germans’ advance and taking gasoline and rations from enemy sup- ply lines before relief arrived.

A dedicated life

After the war, Ramos returned home, but it wasn’t long before he was recalled to active duty to teach Army engi- neers at Ft. Belvoir. His career took him to Korea, not long after the cease-fire was called there. He also worked in Paraguay, as well as Ft. Ord, Ft. Hunter Liggett and Camp Roberts in Bradley, at the south end of Monterey County.

Rising through the ranks to become a colonel, Ramos trained at the Command and General Staff College in Ft. Leavenworth, Kan. He retired from his military career at Camp Roberts, where he was the last Army officer to com- mand the base before it was turned over to the California National Guard in 1971.

Through all of it, Ramos said, he most enjoyed com- manding and training soldiers. His memoir, “The Dedi- cated Life of an American Soldier,” describes the pride he took in making sure his troops were always ready for whatever challenges they might face, but also in showing a more human side to their families, to help build esprit de corps — a concept that is dear to him.

Not long after his retirement, Ramos was hired to work in the San Francisco office of the nascent Environmen- tal Protection Agency, organized in 1970. He said that he spent a lot of time training California Highway Patrol and local police and fire companies on how to identify and clean up hazardous spills on the highways.

Ramos attends church at Our Lady of Carmel, where the parishioners threw a birthday bash in his honor, describing him on social media as a “loving man who always has a twinkle in his eye.” Several members called and emailed The Pine Cone, declaring that his birthday and life of ser- vice were worthy of mention. And obviously, we agreed.

Author supports lights

Dear Editor,

In last week’s Pine Cone, a paid advertisement was placed with the headline, “Karl Pallastrini, what did you know and when did you know it?” It featured a reprint of a 2016 local history article from the Carmel High School Sandpiper, detailing a conversation about moving the location of the high school and the ensuing decision not to, all of which occurred in the 1960s. Although the article’s connection to the cause is unclear, the advertisement, placed by Robert Kahn, sought to campaign against the installation of lights in the CHS stadium.

I wrote the history piece featured in the advertisement. I was 16 years old and in my sophomore year of high school, practicing journalism where I could. I am now 21 years old and in my senior year of college at the University of Southern Caliifornia. Needless to say, before last week, I would have never anticipated my article being printed in The Pine Cone. My piece was appropriated, without my knowledge or permission, for quasi-political purposes by a man who I did not know. I did not place it, nor do I endorse its message. It was simply a summary of the interesting history of school location decisions from 60 years ago and carries zero political or current implications.

To be clear, I am a huge fan of Carmel Unified School District, its teachers and administratos, and former superintendent Pallastrini. I am beyond grateful for the amasing experiences, education and opportunities afforded to me for being fortunate enough to attend Tularcitos, Carmel Middle and Carmel High School. I am also certainly an advocate for the installation of lights on the field. As a relatively recent graduate, it is my opinion that it would enhance the experiences of individual students and build greater community and camaraderie within the student body.

Annalise Krueger, Los Angeles

‘Let them deal with it’

Dear Editor,

The anti-light crowd has made it abunddantly clear. Move the lights down to Carmel Middle School. Let there be lights — as long as they’re not in their neighborhood. It’s not so much that light pollution is the issue. It’s that light pollution specifcally in their neighborhood is “bad.” So what if the lights are in someone else’s neighborhood? Let all those people down at the bottom of the hill deal with it.

Geoff Johnston, Carmel

‘Sense of community’

Dear Editor,

I am writing to you in support of the stadium lights project. Carmel seems to be intent on being simply an enclave for the wealthy and old instead of being a thriving community. A community that welcomes young people and their activities instead of seeing them as a nuisance. I watched the homecoming parade and experienced a sense of community that I haven’t experienced in Carmel for a long while. I would urge the board to be aware that the vocal few (who bought houses knowing very well that there was a high school in the neighborhood) do not represent all of us in the area.

It’s ironic that real estate agencies sell homes touting the excellence of our schools to people who have no interest in our young people.

Patti Long, Carmel

arranged by local attorney Henry G. Jor- gensen, the people who were owed money attached the funds in the bank while the search for Belmont continued.

On June 11, Belmont was arrested in San Diego. After posting a $500 bond, he was ordered to appear before Judge Ernest Michaels in Monterey. The day before his court date, Belmont met with his former friends and apologized, assuring them he had no intent to defraud and they would be paid.

Salinas attorney Pedro E. Zabala repre- sented Belmont at the court hearing. Dis- trict attorney Frank W. Sargent, with assis- tance from Jorgensen, put on a string of witnesses holding worthless checks. Clos- ing with the testimony of Nesbitt, Sargent rested his case shortly after 4:30 p.m. The unpaid funds totaled about $1,600.

The CITY of Seaside recently shared plans to make major improvements along Broadway between Fremont Boulevard and Gen. Jim Moore Boulevard — and is soliciting comments from residents. The work marks another big step in the transformation of downtown Seaside — in 2017-2018, the city spent $7 million to give a sparkling new face to the east end of Broadway between Fremont and Del Monte boulevards.

Roundabouts considered

Called the Broadway Avenue Com- plex Street Corridor Improvement Proj- ect, the work would "reduce Broadway to a single lane in each direction with curb extensions, bike lanes, roundabouts, a safe school crossing adjacent to Martin Luther King Jr. School of the Arts and accessibili- ty improvements throughout the corridor." A map identifies seven sites along Broadway where roundabouts could be built. Specifically, the city wants to create ran away. On June 27, Cloud Belmont then testified that, after learn- ing his funds were attached, he asked his clerk at the bank to go over his accounts. Belmont asserted any over- sight was unintended; he relied on the clerk to keep the books.

Michaels took the matter under advisement and rendered his opinion Thursday afternoon. The evidence was sufficient to refer it to the Superior Court for trial. Belmont, still free on bond, made good on his promise to repay the funds before the trial date of June 29. The Superior Court dismissed the charge, and Belmont paid $350 for court costs.

Riger said council members are scheduled to discuss choosing the requirements they adopted on an emergency basis last March (see story page 12A). "Hopefully they'll rescind the ordinance," Riger told The Pine Cone.

"With test positivity rates remaining low, he continued, "we've had the cup of every- body going maskless." Nonetheless, every person who enters city hall must still be masked at all times, attesting to vaccination status and lack of Covid symptoms.

Meanwhile, public schools, other local governments, courthouses, airports, air- ports, and some medical offices have long done away with Covid-era require- ments and restrictions. Many make no inquiries about vaccination status, nor do they require masks, and questions about current health status are perfunctory or nonexistent.

“It was an amazing experience — I’d get up at dawn and write poetry to the birds who were welcoming the sun

Greene enrolled that fall at the Rhode Island School of Design, learning woodcutting, cutting, and welding as a freshman. The same year, she became an assistant art instructor for the Governor’s School for the Arts. At 18, she became a full-fledged art teacher for the program.

Her youngest, she said, was a precocious 4-year-old in Providence. The oldest was a North Carolina nun in her 90s.

Coming to California

Greene married David Cloutier after college, and they came to California in April 1988 with their 4-year-old son (musician/composer/arranger Perrin Cloutier, a co-founder of the indie-rock band, Beintu), settling in San Francisco in August 1989.

“Two months later, the big earthquake happened, and he decided the Monterey Peninsula might be a good place to look for a job,” Greene said of her husband, who spent

14 years as director of the Cultural Council for Monterey County.

Connection with nature

She and Cloutier divorced in 1991, but she still lives in the mid-valley home they purchased together more than 30 years ago.

Greene’s portfolio has included drawings, canvas paintings, reverse paintings on glass, prints and assemblages.

She had her own gallery in Newport, R.I., in 1979, and directed a gallery for the New Bern, N.C., Arts Council in 1984. She has also painted murals at schools in Marina and Seaside.

“My paintings express the powerful dynamics of earth and sky, revealing the inner workings behind the apparent, the flow of natural forces, changing of seasons, shifts of light and space.

“They reflect my innate connection with nature and sense of her hidden power,” Greene said.

“My prints and digital images of recent years have focused on the male nude in various contexts: spanning, diving, running and floating,” she wrote in an online bio.

“The figures are placed in transition, confusion, serenity or distress. They combine my love of the male form with metaphorical states of the human condition.”

Greene has designed covers and created text illustrations for literary volumes, including “Passion for Place:

$70 million reclamation project, which for decades has supplied enough water to irrigate its golf courses. The project has saved more than 7.6 billion gallons of potable water for the Peninsula.

However, the company also noted the limitations of recycled water and warned against relying on it as the sole solution for the Monterey Peninsula’s water problems. As residents and businesses on the Peninsula are forced to cut back water use, the amount of water to be recycled is also reduced.

“We know firsthand that the supply of recycled water is neither constant nor guaranteed over time,” the company said, adding that the problem is exacerbated during drought. California is in a third year of drought.

“Recycled water alone simply cannot meet the Monterey Peninsula’s water supply needs on a sustainable, long-term basis,” the company said.

‘We want patients to look at themselves, like their appearance, and be happy’

By ELAINE HESSER

HAVE YOU ever compensated for a less-than-enthusiastic start to the day by gussying up a little before you went out to face the world? On a dismal, foggy morning, you might add a touch of lipstick, don a snazzy suit or special piece of jewelry, or spend a few extra minutes on your hair.

It’s easy to find studies correlating people’s perceptions of their own appearance to their self-confidence. Whether it’s fixing bad teeth, having cosmetic surgery or simply “dressing for success,” the data supports the intuitive notion that when you like the way you look, you feel better. That also applies when serious health issues — like breast cancer — set in.

While nobody is arguing that a swipe of blush will work miracles, countering some of the disease’s cosmetic effects can help cancer patients to build confidence. Treatment for breast cancer can be particularly harmful to a woman’s self-image, especially if it involves a partial or complete mastectomy, leaving many feeling less feminine. The effects of other treatments can also alter weight, skin tone, fingernails and hair.

Finding specialized help
Meg Cornish, a licensed clinical social worker at Montage’s Comprehensive Cancer Center, said, “Cancer can be so isolating. We want patients to look at themselves, like their appearance and be happy — to look in the mirror and feel confident.”

She recommends a series of virtual workshops led by the nonprofit organization, Look Good Feel Better (lookgoodfeelbetter.org). The group no longer leads in-person

When better identification leads to better treatment, words matter

By ELAINE HESSER

NEARLY 50 years ago, in an episode of CBS’ iconic series, “All in the Family,” matriarch Edith Bunker announced, “I have a lump in my breast.” It was stunning because in those days, cancer was not discussed — certainly not in a sitcom on national television. It was spoken of in whispers, or referred to as “the c-word,” as if its mere mention might bring it on.

The best anyone hoped for — after treatments that often seemed as bad as the illness — was remission, a purgatory before the disease’s seemingly inevitable, fatal return. No one even mentioned a cure, except as a distant hope.

That’s changed for some types of breast cancer, however, and it makes discussing the disease in specific terms not only acceptable, but important. According to the American Society of Clinical Oncology’s Cancer.net lists some statistics for breast cancer, not- in different combinations. Having all three — estrogen receptor-positive, progesterone receptor-positive, and HER2 — referred to as triple-positive. The disease is further classified and described based on other variables, including where in the breast it’s located and whether it’s metastatized (spread to other parts of the body). Hormone receptor-positive breast cancers are found in 70 to 80 percent of all cases — “by far the most common,” said Fischer. They’re most often slow-growing, and seen more frequently in postmenopausal women, but also can occur in those who are premenopausal. The National Cancer Institute (part of the National Institutes of Health) says that most — but not all — estrogen receptor-positive cancers are also progesterone receptor-positive.

Fischer said to think of estrogen and progesterone as “food” for the cancer cells. Suppressing the hormones “starves” the cells and slows their growth. Women with estrogen receptor-positive cancer are sometimes given once-daily anti-estrogen pills, usually for five to 10 years if the disease is in its early stages. “Older estrogen-blocking pills lengthened many women’s lives, but modern therapies are even more effective,” said Fischer. Metastatic hormone-positive breast cancer is treated indefinitely. That’s because the cancer cells are so slow-growing that “it takes longer to starve them out.”

The treatment can create some of the symptoms of menopause, like night sweats, hot flashes, joint pain and menstrual cycle changes, as well as increased risk of bone loss. This type of cancer recurs more often than others, sometimes after 20 or 30 years.

The treatment can include anything from a lumpectomy, chemotherapy and/or radiation, to a complete mastectomy. Fischer pointed out, “It’s not the cancer in the breast that leads to death. It’s when it goes metastasized.” When a malignant mass is removed, it’s usually done to stop its spread, or if it’s bleeding or painful.

Some forms of breast cancer are sensitive to female hormones and are therefore called hormone receptor-positive. They’re subdivided into progesterone receptor-positive and estrogen receptor-positive, depending on which hormone affects them. HER2-positive breast cancer is named for a growth-promoting protein called HER2. A fourth category, triple-negative, is the least common, and is essentially “none of the above” — not progesterone- or estrogen-sensitive, nor HER2-positive.

It’s possible to have the first three types in different combinations. Having all three

AS EVERYONE who has survived a traumatic experience knows, you can get good advice and help from many caring people, but there’s nothing like talking to someone who’s been there, done that.

The Breast Cancer Assistance Group of Monterey County is an all-volunteer group (no paid staff) that vice president Susan Jordan called, “a club you never want to be invited to join.” Everyone in the organization has had the disease.

Organized in 1997, and celebrating its 25th anniversary this year, the BCAG was formed by four local women who had breast cancer. According to the group’s website, the women were looking for support that was “broader and more thoughtfully conceived” than what their community offered.

Or, as Jordan put it, “It’s like the Golden Rule. We want to help other women as we want to be helped. You’re never prepared for everything that comes with breast cancer — people lose jobs, children drop out of college to take care of relatives, a spouse may have to cut back on work — it’s financially very jolting.”

She said that while many women file for disability pay from Social Security and are eligible for unemployment benefits, payments don’t start coming instantly. “We help them until the money comes in.” Anyone with a breast cancer diagnosis can apply for aid as long as they live in Monterey County or are receiving treatment from a doctor here.

“We ask, ‘Where are you short on money because of your diagnosis?’ The need has to be directly related to the diagnosis,” said Jordan. That said, the group assists with a wide variety of expenses, including transportation (gas money to get to Stanford University for treatment, for example), rent or mortgage payments, childcare and so on.

BCAG can also help fund what Jordan called “therapeutic support,” like mental health services, massage to help with neuropathy, and so on. A doctor must affirm the need for such services.

Applicants can receive a maximum of $3,500 in one year, and Jordan said the average grant is $2,000. In addition to monetary assistance, she noted that thanks to an

BROCCOLI SOUP WITH KALE CHIPS
Sarah Cook, Café Carmel

KALE ISN’T for everyone, but it’s hard to say no to crunchy, salted chips made from the leafy green. In this recipe, Sarah Cook, owner of Café Carmel, uses homemade baked kale chips to add texture to a nourishing broccoli soup.

Oat milk adds full-bodied creaminess to the recipe without a lot of fat, and the ingredients and preparation couldn’t be simpler. A handheld immersion blender makes pureeing a snap, but if you have a regular blender, don’t despair — just be careful when transferring and processing the hot soup.

Don’t skip blanching the broccoli — it makes a significant difference in the appearance of the finished dish. If you use some of the broccoli stems, chop them into small pieces so that they cook in the same amount of time as the florets. We didn’t clear it with Cook, but a dollop of nonfat Greek yogurt on top of the soup would make a nice perch for the kale chips, too.

Serves 3-4 people

Ingredients
- 1 pound (approximately) broccoli
- 1 onion, diced
- 1 tablespoon olive oil
- 3 cups vegetarian stock (or water)
- 1/2 cup oat milk
- 1 bunch kale
- 2 tablespoons olive oil
- Salt and pepper

Preheat the oven to 275 degrees and heat a large pot of water to boiling. Wash the broccoli and break into florets. Lower them into the boiling water and blanch for a few minutes until bright green, and remove with a slotted spoon and plunge into ice water. Drain thoroughly.

And the olive oil to a pot large enough to hold the vegetables and stock. Heat over medium heat, add the onion and cook until soft. Add the broccoli and stock, and season with salt and pepper. Simmer until the broccoli is soft.

Blend the soup in a blender or with a hand blender. If using a blender, work in small batches and use a dish towel to gently hold the top in place.

Mix the flour and milk into a paste in a cup or small bowl and add to the blended soup. Stir and simmer for a few more minutes until thickened, and adjust seasoning.

Kale chips
Wash the kale and cut out the thick central stalks. In a large bowl, gently toss the leaves with the olive oil until coated. Tear the kale into smaller pieces and place on a baking sheet. Sprinkle with salt and place in the oven for 20-25 minutes until crispy, but not burnt.

Serve the soup garnished with kale chips. Another delicious addition would be shown, stirred into the soup, or sprinkled on top as a garnish.

Chef Bio
SARAH COOK was a family doctor for 30 years in England before moving to the United States in 2013 with her husband, Brendan. They bought Café Carmel — founded in 1952 as Wishart’s Bakery — to fulfill one of Cook’s childhood wishes.

“It was always kind of a dream when I was little to have a coffee shop, bookshop or both,” said Cook. “I’ve always enjoyed cooking, it’s a big stress buster for me.” During Covid, her husband was temporarily stranded abroad when he couldn’t return from a trip to England, and Cook was left to manage the new business and take care of four children who were still living at home in Carmel Valley (the other two were in college).

The pandemic hit Café Carmel just as it did other hospitality businesses. “We closed in March” 2020, she said, because between the lack of tourists and the county’s stay-at-home orders, “there was no one around.”

Nevertheless, she kept her spirits up and plowed ahead, thanks to some savings and the Paycheck Protection Program, using the opportunity to complete some upgrades to the popular café.

Now that things are back to normal, customers kick-start their days with the Ocean Avenue shop’s espresso drinks and can choose from avocado toast, a breakfast burrito or an assortment of egg dishes and delicious pastries.

Lunch offerings include soups, a wide variety of salads and panini, and the bakery turns out cupcakes, cookies, cakes, brownies and other yummy treats that are as pretty as they are tasty.

classes locally, but Cornish pointed out that for people whose immune systems are compromised due to medical treatments, learning online may be a safer option, anyway.

The site offers five virtual workshops, as well as more than 30 step-by-step guides and videos. There are tips for drawing on eyebrows (hair loss can include eyelashes and brows), caring for brittle fingernails, and suggestions for wardrobe choices to accommodate changes in weight, skin color (“Jewel tones look good on everybody,” said Cornish), and sensitivity to certain fabrics.

Wigs and warmth

Hair loss can be a major setback. Cornish said that some of the women she’s worked with have found ways to have fun with alternative looks. “They say things like, ‘I always wondered what I’d look like as a blonde,’” and then try on wigs. There are even baseball caps with hair attached, although she said that in the meantime, “These hats and wigs made all the difference in the world for my feeling of comfort, confidence and presentation. I never would have been at ease walking out my front door without something atop my head.” Cornish said that some women find they have “chemo curl” after treatment — their hair grows back in with a different texture, often becoming very curly.

Other resources she recommends include Bay Area Cancer Connection, which offers a list of services under the practical support link at bayareaecancer.org, and Cancer CAREpoint (cancercaresetpoint.org), which helps with finding, choosing and caring for wigs.

Stylish outfits

Less common options include having one’s own hair made into a wig before starting treatment, and cold cap therapy (which may be covered by insurance), which involves wearing what Cornish described as an “uncomfortably cold” cap during chemotherapy to stop hair loss. Although she wasn’t aware of any clothing stores on the Monterey Peninsula that cater to women who have had mastectomies, Cornish mentioned The Next Step boutique in Los Gatos (nextstepboutique.com), where women can get help with finding wigs made all the difference, Garden said that those occasions were holidays at home — Christmas, New Year’s, Valentine’s Day and Easter. Her eyebrows and lashes are growing back in, for which she is grateful, and makeup wasn’t an issue because she always wore masks. Anonymous “angel donor,” there is a special room at the Food Bank for Monterey County’s Salinas facility stocked with supplies for breast cancer patients who need food or personal items. While men for fewer than 1 percent of all breast cancer diagnoses, Jordan said the group is “very open to receiving applications” for assistance from men, and noted that BCAG has helped at least two that she can recall.

Covid caused a decline in requests for assistance. Jordan said she wasn’t sure why that was true, but pointed to a decrease in the number of women who had mammograms during the pandemic. However, she said, “Last year we had the largest number of grant applications in the organization’s history — apparently, a rebound effect.

Giving locally Jordan said that volunteering with the organization, where she was on the board of directors for seven years (during which BCAG helped about 350 women), has changed her views on charitable donations. “I look for local groups to give to,” she said.

The organization, where she was on the board of directors for seven years (during which BCAG helped about 350 women), has changed her views on charitable donations. “I look for local groups to give to,” she said.

That’s largely because of the homegrown support the organization has received from businesses like Carmel Valley Ranch, which has hosted an annual golf tournament Jordan has raised close to $600,000 over the last 25 years. Pasadera is following suit with a similar tournament next month.

Carmel Valley Athletic Club is getting in on the act with a Party in Pink that includes a raffle to be held on Nov. 4. There’s an annual bowl-a-thon, as well, and Jordan added that the group receives widespread support from “the wine community, including vineyards and tasting rooms.”

“We’ve gotten to be known much more and support has grown in the last five years,” she noted, although all the organization’s fundraisers were canceled for a year because of Covid. She credits the Community Foundation for Monterey County’s Covid-relief grants with helping BCAG get through the pandemic. “It was a lifesaver for us,” Jordan said.

Jordan is cancer-free and considers herself lucky. “I had a lengthy treatment,” she said, “but I had a lengthy treatment.”

“Every woman who has been through this understands the journey for women or their families get through a difficult time.

In response to the drug being long-lasting and reduce or eliminate some of the well-known side effects of chemotherapy, like nausea and hair loss.

She added that many women who might have lived less than a year before this latest round of treatments emerged, can now expect to live as long as five years or more. T-DXd also works in what are called low-HER2 patients, whose test results don’t meet the threshold to be designated as HER2-positive.

Reducing side effects

Triple-negative breast cancer is the least common form of the disease, said Dr. Nancy Tray. “It accounts for 10 to 15 percent of HER2-positive.

Until recently, triple-negative breast cancers have been treated with chemotherapy, which targets cells that grow rapidly, but doesn’t distinguish between cancer cells and healthy ones, so it can also damage normal cells, sometimes causing nasty side effects.

In addition to chemotherapy, Tray listed three options for treating triple-negative breast cancer. A drug called a PARP inhibitor is approved for patients who have a specific mutation in a gene related to breast cancer. The PARP inhibitor prevents cancer cells from repairing themselves, causing them to die.

Immunotherapy works by getting the body’s immune system to fight the disease. Tray explained that cancer cells are “invisible” to the immune system, but therapies are available that “remove its cloak of invisibility,” allowing it to be attacked like any other invader. And, just like for HER2-positive cancers, there also drugs that flag cancer cells for chemotherapy while limiting damage to healthy cells.

The doctors were all optimistic about the future of breast cancer treatment, noting that life expectancies are growing longer, and some patients can be completely cured.

Of course, they said, good outcomes depend on catching the disease early with regular mammograms, which should begin at age 40 for women with no other risk factors.

There is some disagreement in the medical community about whether women should have mammograms annually or biannually.

However, it’s worth noting that the doctors said there was a surge of new diagnoses after Covid lockdowns ended and women whose mammograms had been delayed were able to have them done. As always, talk with your healthcare provider about your risk factors, and follow their recommendations.

Celtic music quartet — three brothers and their dad — plays Friday

ONE OF the hottest acts on the Celtic music scene today, The Byrne Brothers performs Friday at St. Mary’s by-the-Sea in Pacific Grove.

By CHRIS COUNTS

Born in Dublin and now residents of Florida, the group’s members all come from the same family — Luca (18) plays accordion, Finn (16) plays the banjo, mandolin and guitar, and Dempsey (12) plays the bodhrán (a drum) and whistle, while dad, Tommy, plays Irish bagpipes, the fiddle and the guitar.

Jacqueline Pierce of St. Mary’s said the church is thrilled to welcome the musical family. “This young group is on their way to L.A. to perform and accept an award, and are making a stop to entertain us here,” Pierce said. “Their talents are many — they dance, sing and are multi-instrumentalists. It will be a joyful evening full of fun.”

The concert starts at 7 p.m. Tickets are $28 for adults, and $15 for kids under 12. Masks are required. The church is located at 12th and Central. For more details, call or text (831) 224-3819.

Downtown Monterey rocks

If you like your music loud, the Golden State Theater is the place to be this weekend — on Friday, heavy metal pioneer Y&T makes its return to the downtown venue, while Saturday, Get the Led Out pays tribute to the music of Led Zeppelin. A local rock band, Jon Griffin and The Lightfighters, opens for Y&T.

Showtime is 8 p.m. Tickets for Y&T start at $35, and at $29.50 for Get the Lead Out. The theater is located at 417 Alvarado St. Call (831) 649-1070.

Also playing this week At the Golden State are funk band Cymande (Oct. 4) and punk rock icon Henry Rollins (Oct. 5).

Jazz jam in Seaside

“Suite Jazz” returns Sunday to Embassy Suites in Seaside, featuring an all-star cast of local musicians. The lineup includes singer Janice Perl, keyboardist Bill Spencer, saxophonist Jim Stainton and drummer Jim Vanderzwaan, along with a special guest. “Don’t miss these superstars and future stars,” suggested singer Lee Durley, who is co-hosting the event with Vanderzwaan.

The music begins at 1 p.m. Embassy Suites is located at 1441 Canyon Del Rey Blvd.

Pianist kicks off season

An award-winning pianist who was once named Musical America’s Instrumentalist of the Year, Jeremy Denk kicks off the Carmel Music Society’s 2022-2023 season Sunday at Sunset Center.

A father and three sons who play Celtic music, the Byrne Brothers visit St. Mary’s by-the-Sea in Pacific Grove Friday.

Sweet Reba’s honored, pigs and pinot, Shakes’ final Safari, and Children First State Sen. John Laird on Monday presented the 17th Senate District’s Small Business of the Year Award to Sweet Reba’s in the Crossroads shopping center following an announcement last week that he’d chosen the popular bakery for the honor.

“Sweet Reba’s has been a fixture in the Carmel community for many years with their cookies, cakes and secret lunch items,” he said, noting that proprietor Rebecca Wilson made her first custom cake in 2004 for her son’s 7th birthday and “has not stopped baking since.”

Laird also observed that Wilson has “been a cornerstone of the community and helped support other small businesses to grow, such as the Great British Bake Shop,” which recently opened in Sal-

nas. The bakery has also raised funds for an employee’s Ukrainian family and the International Rescue Committee by selling desserts inspired by that war-torn country.

According to Laird, each year, nearly all California legislators choose small businesses in their districts to honor in collaboration with the California Small Business Association. Since Laird and his honorees couldn’t attend the annual luncheon in Sacramento in June, they arranged the reception at the Crossroads for Sept. 26.

Pigs and pinot

Those who couldn’t get into the first Pigs and Pinot on the Patio held at the Bernardus tasting room in Carmel Valley Village over the weekend might be lucky enough to nab a ticket to an additional session planned for Oct. 2 from noon to 3 p.m. “We will be pouring all of our single-vineyard pinot noir and enjoying Rob Baker’s famous slow smoked pork,” organizers announced. Baker, who handles sales for Bernardus, has also long operated his Me and the Hound Memphis Barbecue turns out fantastic slow-cooked pork.

T

Tickets are $60 per person ($55 for club members) and can be reserved by calling (831) 288-8121 or emailing Lauren Rammel at hrammel@bernardus.com. The tasting room is located at 5 W. Carmel Valley Road. Visit bernardus.com to learn more.

Final Sabu’s Safari

This year’s Sabu’s Safari, hosted by brothers Sabu Jr. and Chris Shake, will be the last, the family announced this week.

In 2008, the Shakes decided to organize a dinner auction in their father’s memory to raise funds for The Salvation Army Monterey Peninsula Corps as part of the Sabu Shake Sr. Memorial Foundation. Their annual Sabu’s Safari went on to sell out every year, with more than 300 guests attending.

Centered around gourmet food prepared by chefs from the family’s restaurants, beautiful décor and unique auction items, the party has raised more than $5.7 million for the local Salvation Army corps. The funds have helped pay for daily hot meals and food boxes, showers, laundry, and computers and job assistance at the Sabu Shake Sr. Good Samaritan Center, “which provides all the services for those in need that their dad believed in.” In July, a new street next to the center in Sand City was named Shake Avenue.

Nevertheless, two years ago, the event committee decided the 15th Annual Sabu’s Safari set for Oct. 1 would be the final event. The party is already sold out, but donations can still be made through sabusafarifoundation.org or by calling (831) 645-9124.

Children First Gala

The nonprofit Kinship Center, which finds foster families for kids in need, helps facilitate adoptions and offers other services, will hold its second annual Children First Gala at The Club at Pasadera Oct. 13. Funds raised during the party — this year themed “An Evening of Elegant Masquerade” — will support the center’s mission of “creating safe, permanent families for local children who cannot safely remain with their biological parents by supporting their foster care, relative caregiver, children’s mental health, and other child and family services.”

Longtime child welfare activist and advocate Carol Bishop, co-founder and former executive director of the Kinship Center, will be honored for her “55 years of dedication to children and families in our community,” according to Doreen Lake, development director and the gala’s event coordinator.

Guests can expect to enjoy a reception with champagne, wine, cocktails, music, appetizers, a raffle and a silent auction, followed by a sit-down dinner prepared by talented Pasadera chef Colin Moody and his culinary team. A program and live auction will accompany dinner, and the evening will wrap up with music and dancing.

mation, visit childrenfirstgala.org or call (831) 262-1471.

Nicolaí to have full bar

Nicolaí Cosina de Herencia, the long-awaited restaurant planned for Carmel

See FOOD next page
Plaza by the family behind Salinas’ popular Villa Azteca, is on track to get a full liquor license, rather than the beer-and-wine license originally sought in July 2021.

A notice posted at the construction site Sept. 8 indicates the new restaurant is acquiring an on-sale general license, which would allow it to offer a full range of cocktails and liquors along with beer and wine, unlike the family’s sister restaurant in Salinas. According to the state Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control, the license had belonged to the former Planet Gemini nightclub on Fremont Street but was surrendered well before its February 2023 expiration date. The license also includes catering, and all are pending transfer to the new Nicolás site.

Liquor licenses are limited by the state, with new ones issued only when the population of an area increases, so there’s a robust secondary market for existing licenses that are no longer being used. For example, Wild Fish restaurant in Pacific Grove was able to step up its cocktail game after acquiring the full license formerly held by the Bull & Bear Whiskey Bar and Taphouse on Alvarado Street in June 2021.

Villa Azteca’s Adi Alvarez, her mother, executive chef Susana Alvarez, and father, Leopoldo Alvarez, received permission from the city in June 2021 to open Nicolás, from the family’s patriarch. At age 18, he came to the United States to become a farmer, worked hard and earned enough money to return to Mexico, where he bought land and started an organic farm. His wife — Adi’s grandmother — didn’t know how to cook, so she learned from her new father-in-law and went on to develop her own recipes inspired by the abundant produce her husband was growing. She subsequently handed them down to her daughter, Susana, Adi’s mother, and those cherished recipes will create the foundation for the family’s new venture.

“We want our customers to enjoy Mexican food at a more elevated level, to experience how complex and unique it can be,” Adi Alvarez said at that hearing. “Unique cuisine for a unique and special village.”

As approved, the restaurant will have 50 seats inside, including 10 at the bar, and more outdoors, and will be open from 8 a.m. to 9 p.m. daily.

Vineyards in full color

A newly released map of the vineyards of the Santa Lucia Highlands by Antonio Galloni and Alessandro Masnaghetti “depicts each vineyard in stunning, unprecedented detail,” according to a group of wineries and growers known as the Santa Lucia Highlands Wine Artisans.

The Santa Lucia Highlands appellation, highly regarded for pinot noir and chardonnay, includes just under 6,000 acres of vineyards in a strip approximately 18 miles long that “consists of a series of alluvial fans in the Salinas Valley that rise into hillside, elevated plateaus and terraces, all created by land that was broken off from the North American plate and moved north by the force of the San Andreas Fault somewhere in the range of 60 million to 250 million years ago,” according to the winemakers’ organization.

The “groundbreaking” map marks a moment in history for the region, considering it’s the first produced by Galloni and Masnaghetti for the area, according to the SLH Wine Artisans, and the accompanying text “provides rich context that brings the region’s sites to life.”

The first edition is available for $30.

Fair sees post-Covid success
After two years of pandemic-mandated restrictions, this year’s Monterey County Fair Sept was a big success, according to fair CEO Kelly Violini-Rodoni, who said attendance was up 12.5 percent from last year, the carnival was up 32 percent, and concession sales were up 26 percent, even with the fair reducing its cut so concessionaires could keep their prices lower.

In addition, a dozen participating non-profits raced more than $126,000. The fair also offered free admission for seniors, veterans and active military on the first day, admitted 939 kids under 12 throughout the fair, and on Labor Day, more than 3,900 food items were donated to the Food Bank for Monterey County.

Raen and Continuum wine dinner
Oct. 10 will bring “an exclusive wine tasting opportunity and an incredible five-course tasting menu prepared by executive chef Cal Stamenov,” and guest Dante and Carissa Mondavi, who will present the wines of Raen and Continuum. Grauging’s wine director Eric Ewers announced this week.

Continuum Estate was founded by siblings Tim and Marcia Mondavi — the children of renowned Napa Valley wine pioneer Robert Mondavi — in 2005. And their wines are only available by allocation, with people signing up to be notified if and when bottles become available.

And Tim Mondavi’s sons, Dante and Carlo, studied wine under their father and grandfather and in 2016 opened Raen on the Sonoma Coast to produce pinot noir and chardonnay. Their wines are also only sold to members who receive allocations.

All that is to say, these wines are hard to come by.

Dinner will start at 6 p.m. with a first course of warm Dungeness crab salad paired with 2021 Raen Lady Marjorie Cuvée chardonnay, followed by leek-and-scallion-crusted salmon served alongside 2016 Raen Royal St. Robert Cuvée pinot noir.

Executive director Robert Reese told The Pine Cone that the building was constructed in the late 1920s or early 1930s. Besides being used as a garage, it was also used for storage before it became art studio. Most recently, it was used by artists Robin Sawyer and Dick Crispo.

“We’re going through the permit process, and we’ve had the city take a look at it,” Reese said. “We’re not adding any square-footage—we’re renovating the inside, and we’re replacing the roof and exterior walls. We’re trying to keep it as it originally looked. For more details, call (831) 624-7491.

Museum hosts artist talk

An artist who completed a residency and fellowship at poet Robinson Jeffers’ landmark Tor House, Enrique Martinez Celaya presents a talk Saturday at the Monterey Museum of art.

Celaya will reflect on both the residency and the show, and describe his creative journey.

“Enrique’s enduring interest in the Carmel poet Robinson Jeffers provides a unique opportunity to engage our community in a dialogue with California art — past, present and future,” the museum’s executive director Corey Madden said.

A show pairing Celaya’s artwork with Jeffers’ poems, “The Fire of Heaven,” is on display at the museum through Oct. 9.

Born in Cuba and now living in Los Angeles, Celaya discovered inspiration in Jeffers’ words — and the place he called home: “This exhibition offers tantalizing evidence of how California has influenced him, and how Jeffers continues to generate resonance for artists working outside this region,” Madden added.

The talk starts at 2 p.m. The museum is located at 559 Pacific St. Visit montereyart.org.

WINE

Third will be Liberty duck cannononi paired with Continuum, a Bordeaux-style blend with varying percentages of cabernet sauvignon, cabernet franc, petit verdot and merlot for each vintage. The current 2019 vintage will be served with this course, followed by 2017 Continuum with parmesan served with this course, followed by 2017 Continuum with merlot for each vintage. The current 2019 vintage will be unveiled during a ceremony Tuesday along the east stairwell of the Monterey County Administrative Building. The painting, which shows students with laptops, is reminiscent of the style that was popular with muralists during the 1930s. Ortiz was commissioned by the Arts Council of Monterey County to create the piece, and donations totaling $10,000 paid for it.

At Tuesday’s county board of supervisors meeting, count y administration officer Charles McKee praised Ortiz’s work. “It’s a beautiful work of art, and it helps connect the work we do with the community,” he added.

Ortiz has created more than 70 murals throughout Monterey County.

Meet the artisans

Folktaile Winery’s Provisions gallery hosts a pop-up, “California Celebration of Cork, Glass, Pottery and Baskets,” Friday from noon to 6 p.m.

“Come meet our creative California artisans — our cork designer, glass blower, potter and basket maker — all showing their fabulous creations,” the winery said.

The winery is located 8940 Carmel Valley Road.
Meet Village Park Road: Supes OK new name for renegade Rio Road segment

By CHRIS CUNTS

IF YOU’VE ever been puzzled about why there are two very distinct segments of Rio Road at the mouth of Carmel Valley, you’re not alone. Recognizing the quandary, the Monterey County Board of Supervisors voted unanimously Tuesday to name the lesser of the two segments Village Park Road.

While the Rio Road that intersects Highway 1 is familiar to just about everybody, the one that provides access to the Community Church of the Monterey Peninsula and the former Rancho Cañada golf course is less known. The discrepancy happened because it was once believed the two Rio Roads would be connected and stretch from Highway 1 to Carmel Valley Road, passing behind Carmel Middle School. But in 2013, when the Carmel Valley Master Plan was updated, any plans to connect the two segments were officially abandoned. Much of the former Rancho Cañada is now part of Palo Corona park.

The Monterey Peninsula Regional Park District made the request to change the name of the road. Monterey County surveyor Michael Goetz told the supervisors.

“Having two disconnected roads with the same name obviously leads to confusion to motorists thinking it goes through, when of course, it doesn’t,” he said.

No addresses affected

Goetz observed that no properties along the future Village Park Road had Rio Road addresses, because the church and the former Rancho Cañada — now the MPRPD’s offices — have addresses on Carmel Valley Road.

“The name change will have no impact to any existing addresses,” Goetz confirmed.

Supervisor Mary Adams called for a vote on the name change, and it was quickly passed. “It will be very helpful for people to see the difference between the two roads,” she added.

We’re lucky to have such devoted readers ...

- “We love our charming newspaper and the pleasure we get from reading it with our morning coffee every week, hopefully in a cozy cafe in Carmel. Please never stop the paper newspaper.”

- “The Carmel Pine Cone is an informative, well written newspaper. Lots of hard work goes into this fine publication. Keep moving forward!”

- “Last year wasn’t great for my family, but I have to let you know that when I turn on the computer on Friday morning or the weekend and see the Pine Cone, I smile.”

- “Thank you for your weekly emails. Even though I’ve lived in France since 2008, I read the Carmel Pine Cone almost every week as I still have many friends and some family in the area.”

- “I love receiving the Carmel Pine Cone through my email. Thanks for the intriguing and interesting information!”

- “I have been a faithful reader of the Pine Cone (the email version as well as the paper one) ever since we moved to Pebble Beach from Woodside in 2001. You are very informative about whatever happens here. Thank you!”

- “You have a wonderful publication. We read the online edition every week.”

- “Tho’ I live 300 miles away and visit the Peninsula only once a year (for the last 35 years), I enjoy your newspaper from the first to the last page every week online and I thank you for that.”

- “Keep up the great reporting! I like reading the truth without the spin unlike other local papers.”

- “As a longtime reader of your paper, I want to thank you for the great job you and your team do in covering the area. And I especially like (agree with) your editorial page.”

- “When in Tucson, I look forward to Friday mornings with great anticipation so I can download the week’s edition of the Pine Cone and read it cover to cover. This helps me feel connected to this very special community. When in our beloved Carmel, each Friday morning I jump in our electric car with our golden retriever, Daisy, by my side and race down to Ocean and Mission to get the newest edition. Daisy insists on carrying it in her mouth the entire way home. We have so much to be proud of in Carmel and the Pine Cone sits near the top of the list.”

- “Thanks for the opportunity to read this wonderful little paper. It is much appreciated.”

- “We’ve been email subscribers to the Pine Cone for a year now, ever since we bought a house in Carmel (we still live in Minnesota but will be retiring in a few years— can’t wait! I really enjoy reading about our future home town.”

- “I’m not asking that this be published, but I want to offer my thanks to you for the insights, intelligence and objectivity offered in your paper. What a contrast to most publications out there.”

- “How refreshing to have direct, truthful, no nonsense editorials. Unfortunately, this style of writing has been lost in our feel good society. Keep at it.”

- “I get The Pine Cone every week and enjoy it more than you can know. What a wonderful paper you have. I read every word!”

- “I just wanted to let you know how truly outstanding The Pine Cone is. The writing equals, if not exceeds, top-notch national papers. You and your staff should be proud. I know I’ve told you before how great I think The Pine Cone is, but it really is a terrific paper.”

- “Thank you for providing balanced and researched reporting and upbeat articles. I hope we have The Pine Cone around for many years to come. If it gets down to it, I would pay for the subscription to keep the paper viable.”

- “We poll our ticket-buyers as to where they hear about our concerts. You might be surprised to learn how many of them mention The Pine Cone. Thanks!”

- “Thanks for the consistently great job you do with your newspaper. I regularly read several newspapers from around the country and yours has the best editorial integrity — bar none. Keep up the good work!”

- “I look forward to The Pine Cone more than you will ever know.”

Carmel-by-the-Sea: A lost credit card was reported.
Carmel Valley: Animal control responded to a report of a dog unattended in a parked car on Mission north of Fourth. Limited windows were left open, and a thermostat...
Consider it Done!

When you receive unexpected confirmation of something you were merely thinking about, it is a good idea not to tempt the gods. I had been considering a column based upon the continuing conundrum of what to have for dinner. It's a scene straight from the movie, "Groundhog Day." The alarm goes off, Sonny and Cher sing, "I Got You Babe," and Bill Murray asks, "What's for dinner?"

Later, the same day, I saw a post on Facebook: Who knew that the hardest part of being an adult is figuring out what to cook for dinner for the rest of your life? That's a cartoon light bulb coming on over my head. The post garnered 9,000 comments, 28,000 shares, and 66,000 likes. You can't just hear this dinner conversation?

ADAM: "Apples baked in fig leaves again! Don't we have that last night?"

EVE: "Quite complaining or you'll be wearing your dinner one of these days."

I am my own worst enemy when trying to determine what to have. My dinner music is Jimmy Buffet's "Cheeseburger in Paradise." I'm a meat-and-potatoes guy — not that I don't try to incorporate more vegetables into my diet. I search the internet for palatable vegetable dishes. But when I see recipes made from kale, leeks and legumes, I get a craving for fried baloney sandwiches. Wasn't there a horror movie called, "The Creature from the Black Legume?"

Cooks like to integrate broccoli into recipes. I hate broccoli. My father-in-law, born on a Kentucky farm, used to say that pigs won't eat broccoli, and he wouldn't eat anything pigs wouldn't eat. Our original parents were evicted from Eden for eating brocoli. Bill Gates should be writing this column on an i陇c. If vegetables are so appealing, why are food marketers so devoted to dressing them up to look and taste like meat?

Let them eat beans

My distaste for vegetables goes back to my childhood, when I pushed green beans around my dinner plate hoping they would disappear. My mother would admonish me with, "Eat your green beans. Think of the starving children in China who wish they had green beans to eat." Hey mom, even a 6-year-old has a good response to that laughable statement.

Fish is a reliable fallback, if it doesn’t taste like fish. Ironically, I like shellfish, which I should avoid because of gouty arthritis. My fettuccine Alfredo with prawns is delicious enough to warrant a laughable statement. The problem dates back to the earliest days of recorded history. Can't you just eat anything pigs wouldn't eat? Sometimes I resort to one of my standby meals from my starving student days, and whip up a hearty dinner of good, old-fashioned snads. Snads? My college roommate and I skimped on food, as our budget was tighter than a Wayne Newton facelift. A meattime staple was a nameless concoction of ground beef, potatoes and any can of vegetables on hand. We'd brown the meat, mash the potatoes, add the vegetables and mix it all up. It was an inexpensive, fill-the-tummy, stick-to-the-ribs meal.

One day my roommate received an invitation to the Student Nurses Association Dance, abbreviated S.N.A.D. We liked the word so much we added it to our lexicon as a catchall word to describe the indescribable, which is how our ground beef meal became snads.

Snads do stick to your ribs, but be advised they also stick to anything they come in contact with. Clean the pots and pans immediately, or you'll need to take a blowtorch to them.

Lacking in resolve

You would think that modern supermarket stacks stocked with an overwhelming variety of comestibles would simplify menu planning. Not so. I make resolute decisions about soaps and paper products, wine and ice cream. Then I stand before the meat/ fish counter as unsavory and timid as a student nurse.
Pacifier was used to obtain the temperature in the vehicle. The dog was observed showing quick panting behavior. The dog owner was located, and educational information was discussed. Owner was cooperative, and a warning was given.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Two vehicles towed from Junipero and Sixth.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Cat vs. bat vs. human on Dolores north of Fifth. Owner’s cats brought a bat into the house where a boy was sleeping.

Carmel area: Online report of theft on Carmel Ranchito Boulevard.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Lost silver necklace with sea pearls and crystals. All were in a navy blue bag.

Carmel Valley: Deputy responded to a report of a male entering a home on Cachagua Road.

Carmel area: Subject reported a lost purse at the Crossroads. A credit card in the purse was later used by an unauthorized person.

Carmel area: Deputy responded to a medical call for service for a person who was found deceased inside the residence on Ford Road and was located by a family member.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 15

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Traffic stop at Flat-ters and Highway 1 at 0102 hours found a 50-year-old female to be in possession of meth and drug paraphernalia. Cited and released.
